

TIMELESS LOVE

CHAPTER 6 LEON DAVIS, WHO WAS A LITTLE OLDER

When Hathaway pushed open the door of the conference room and went in, the men present were shocked. If it weren't for her owing them money, they really couldn't bear to embarrass such a beautiful woman.

Mr. Sun said in a soft tone,

"Hathaway, when will you paid us back the money you owe us?"

Mr. Sun was showing some politeness, while Mr. Wang directly stared at Hathaway covetously.

"Hathaway, there is actually another way that you don't have to pay back the money..."

Even if he didn't say anything, his obscene flirting had shown his mind. If she would like to sleep with them, they could write off the debt. Anyway, her reputation was so bad that no one knew how many men had slept with her, so she should not mind being played by them.

Actually, before this, Hathaway had been hounded by all kinds of creditors and had been humiliated or molested by those people many times, but she laughed it off.

Today, however, she suddenly didn't want to put up with them. In front of the two men sat the tea that the secretary had made for them. Hathaway went over and picked up the hot tea and poured the tea onto the two men unceremoniously.

After being splashed with the tea, they first felt stunned and then jumped up in exasperation. When they rushed forward, they cursed and tried to attack

Hathaway. She calmly stepped back, and Barry beside her tacitly raised his hand and stopped the two men.

Barry was a strong young man. Even if they attacked him at the same time, they couldn't touch Hathaway. In fact, no one knew that Hathaway chose Barry as an assistant because he was at the senior level of Taekwondo and proficient in various self-defense techniques.

Hathaway also knew that her character would one day lead to some troubles, so she had found herself a good fighter to protect her in advance.

With Barry guarding her in front, Hathaway declared quietly,

"It's taken for granted to pay back debts, but there's never a reason for people to pay back debts with bodies. I hope you will talk to me politely. I will pay back the money soon. The deadline is tomorrow."

Hathaway bit her teeth and gave them such a time.

"Hathaway Taylor!"

Tom Taylor, who was on the side, wanted to scold her angrily, but he was interrupted by her directly.

"Uncle Tom, if you are here to help them make things difficult for me, please shut up."

"We are family. Uncle Tom, with your quality, it's no wonder that Grandpa didn't give you the company."

"Barry, see them off."

Tom and the other two were very angry but helpless when Hathaway left after talking relentlessly.

Ten minutes later, Barry knocked on the door and entered Hathaway's office.

Barry frowned slightly, and his tone of voice was full of worry.

"Miss Taylor, you just promised to pay the money back tomorrow..."

"If I didn't say so, I can't make myself brazen."

Hathaway answered his question and then asked him,

"Is there any private schedule for Leon Davis today?"

Barry answered honestly.

"Yes, he is going to have a blind date today."

"Ha-ha."

Hathaway almost spewed out the coffee.

"Does a man like him still need a blind date?"

Barry continued,

"It is said that this was arranged by Mrs. Davis."

Hathaway made such a fuss about it and then nodded.

"This is also understandable. He is not young, and he is still not married now. His parents are definitely anxious about this."

Barry was speechless. At the age of 23, he envied that Leon Davis was at the age of 32, and he didn't think he was old. Wasn't that the golden age for a man?

When Hthwy pushed open the door of the conference room and went in, the men present were shocked. If it weren't for her owning them money, they really couldn't bring themselves to embarrass such beautiful women.

Mr. Sun said in soft tones,
