

Chapter 65 Summit Group

Alyssa had already followed Alia to get a clear picture of the environment.

Now, she was guided by Alia to the door of Mr. Wood's office.

"This is Mr. Wood's office. Miss Graham, please go in!"

"Okay."

Alyssa nodded and knocked on the door of Mr. Wood's office, and soon there was a "come in" sound.

Alyssa walked into Hassan's office.

Hassan immediately explained to her about the Summit Group's case.

"Summit Group is looking for a suitable partner to evaluate their project and help them find the right partner for financing. This case is quite important. I will personally lead the research team, and you will come with me to Summit Group in a few minutes, together with Melany Swift and Trent Carter."

"Okay." Alyssa didn't expect to get such an important case as soon as she got to work.

Ella said that Hassan was one of the shareholders of Citic, and was also a big leader. The case that could make the big leader pay attention was bound to be important.

It was a great opportunity for her.

Alyssa soon met Melany and Trent.

Melany was a little older than her, wearing heavy glasses, holding the information all the time with a serious face, looking very unapproachable.

Trent was a bald man. His bald head could even reflect the sunlight during the day. He seemed more accessible than Melany. As for age, he was probably in his thirties. It looked like they wouldn't get a chance to talk because they really didn't have much to say.

Half an hour later.

Hassan personally led the team to Summit Group.

In the president's office.

Summit Group's president Vincent Baker sat on one side.

Hassan sat on the other side.

They started talking about Summit Group.

Melany took notes and Trent looked at the iPad he brought over.

Alyssa didn't really know what to do. Mr. Wood didn't seem to talk much about work with Vincent. Later, they just talked about family stuff.

Alyssa suddenly felt something was wrong.

Summit Group used to be in the food business, but it started to grow bigger because of the participation of many shareholders. But because of this, the Summit Group had a lot of different leaders.

Gradually, they started to have different opinions.

In the case of disagreement, it was normal to listen to the one who had the most shares. This meant that Vincent, who was sitting in front of Mr. Wood, should be the person with the most shares in Summit Group.

But Alyssa remembered the information she had just looked up when she came here. Vincent was not the person who held the most shares in Summit Group.

The largest shareholder in Summit Group should be Robert Baker.

Robert was Vincent's father. Vincent was now in his forties, so Robert would be about sixty or seventy years old. It was not surprising that the father's position was passed to the son, but what was strange was that according to the information she had seen before, their father-son relationship did not seem to be very good.

Although Vincent was Robert's only son, their relationship had never been good.

A year or so ago, Robert had been seriously ill once. Before he collapsed, he said in front of all the executives of Summit Group that he would rather donate all of his assets than leaving them to Vincent.

Later, Robert's condition stabilized.

Six months ago, he even attended a press conference. During the press conference, Robert was very quiet and Vincent was with him all the time. It seemed that Robert didn't participate in the company's activities after that. It was Vincent who operated the company.

Alyssa thought about the information and felt that there was something wrong, but she couldn't say what was wrong.

She looked at Vincent and noticed that Vincent was looking in her direction. So, she smiled at Vincent. He immediately withdrew his gaze, and so did Alyssa.

After a moment, she looked up and found Vincent looking at Trent.

He looked at Trent from top to bottom as if Trent was a prisoner.

Trent happened to look up, and his gaze almost met Vincent's.

She saw Vincent hastily withdraw his gaze.

After a moment, Alyssa subconsciously glanced at Melany.

Sure enough!

Vincent was also looking at Melany.

He was watching them secretly.

Alyssa figured this out and knew that Vincent was not simple.

This person was good at observing people.

The person who could hold the position of the president among so many big shareholders was naturally not simple.

Alyssa felt that if she wanted to complete the case successfully, she had to solve Vincent first.

After coming out of Summit Group, Hassan's face did not look good.

Hassan wanted his people to do the company research work first, but Vincent refused.

Vincent's apparent uncooperative behavior was a warning to them.

He didn't want to seek help to get him through the difficult time.

This was strange.

Hassan told them to organize the information while they were in the car.

Back at the office, Alyssa got busy and looked up all the information about Vincent.

Vincent was forty-one years old and married. His wife died in a car accident a year ago. They never had any children. Six months ago, Vincent married Susan Field, who was Robert's previous secretary for seven years.

Alyssa carefully connected all the information and felt that this was not right.

First of all, Vincent's current wife Susan was Robert's secretary before, and he was Robert's son, so it was normal for them to meet each other. It was not surprising that they had feelings for each other because they had contact.

The key was whether their feelings for each other were before or after Vincent's marriage.

Alyssa had no desire to pry into their privacy, but it was her job, so she had to figure it out.

Susan was thirty years old and was now Vincent's wife. Before that, she had been Robert's secretary for several years.

It didn't seem wrong.

Alyssa continued to look down and suddenly saw a news link. She immediately opened it.

Susan had been accused of theft a year ago by none other than Vincent's original wife.

Shortly after that, Vincent's wife died in a car accident.

Theft?

What was this?

Alyssa checked the news reports at that time and knew that the police even got involved.

Then it must have been on the record.

Alyssa thought of the officer who had helped her resolve her dispute with Ryan.

She immediately called him to find out what was going on.

The officer immediately helped Alyssa, "Mrs. Hunter, this case did have a record. At that time, Mrs. Baker said Miss Field, now Mrs. Baker, had leaked the secret information about the Summit Group. Mrs. Baker also said that Miss Field had a flash drive. She took someone else's money and tried to ruin the Summit Group."
