

The Runaway Mommy's Alpha Mate by Fanny Brook Chapter 11

Chapter 11 The Wedding Dress Colin proudly entered Daniel's villa and lounged on his sofa.

"Dude, I'm telling you, I'm seriously bad at lying. So, could you not send me out on such a difficult mission next time? You could've just given her the potion yourself, right?"

Daniel gave Colin a kick. "You really should learn from your father and be the Beta he used to b

Colin got up and replied, "Sure, I'll go ask him for help then." Daniel rolled his eyes, failing to understand how Colin was going to seek tutelage from the previous Beta, who was no longer in this world.

"Oh, by the way... Aside from saving that old man from the underground room, I've also got a lead on that other thing you asked me to look into." Colin took out a file from his pocket and handed it to Daniel.

When Daniel took out a few pieces of paper from the file, Colin said, "What you have there is the little boy's birth certificate, which clearly states that he's born on May 20th in the year 2018."

Daniel's pupils instantly contracted. That's just four months after we parted ways

'If I were to take her word for it and that she found another man to give birth to Jeremi after we parted, the timeline wouldn't match.

'After all, it would take a werewolf to be pregnant for six months before they give birth. On top of that, any child that's born prematurely like four months would very likely die.

'Which means... Heather was lying to me, and Jeremi is indeed my son.'

"Apart from that, I've also found out more about Heather's living conditions over the past five years." Colin sat up straight and looked at Daniel. "Her neighbors claim that she has always been single." Daniel probably did not even notice this himself, but he sighed in relief when he found out that the woman did not have a "husband."

However, Colin saw the entire thing, making him smile. "Congratulations, your wife is still your wife, and your son is still your son." Daniel looked up and shot a glance at him. "I don't care about these at all." Alexander roared, "You f*cking coward!"

Unfortunately, nobody paid Alexander any attention.

Colin merely shrugged and quickly said, "Sure, sure, you don't care about it at all. You were only trying to train your Beta's competence, in other words, me. Which was why you sent me out on that investigation mission, nothing else." Daniel shot him a glare. "I only hate it when others lie to me, so this doesn't mean that I'm concerned about that woman."

"Sure, of course." Colin then seemed to be sarcastic as he said, "I know that you're only concerned about Kasey, or should I say, the Galaxy Pack's Alpha?"

Daniel raised his eyebrows slightly and leaned against the sofa. His eyes turned even darker than night itself.

Colin knew that those eyes of his harbored hatred in them. 'How could he possibly forget about his plan to avenge his parents' deaths so easily?' Meanwhile, after Deanna ingested the potion, she felt much better and could even walk outside.

Dr. Decker then told her that he could perform the surgery for her in two days with a 70% success rate. Although there was a certain risk to it, this was the only remaining method left to save Deanna.

Thus, Heather lived in fear over the next two days before Deanna was finally strolled into the operating theater.

The surgery lasted for seven whole hours, but fortunately, Dr. Decker was able to work his magic and successfully complete the surgery. What was even more fortunate was that Deanna had recovered quickly, and she was discharged from hospital after just a few days.

After that, out of concern that her mother might feel bored at home, Heather brought both Deanna and Jeremi out for a stroll.

The trio were walking merrily when Heather suddenly stopped.

Deanna then followed Heather's line of sight and realized that her daughter was staring at a wedding dress that was displayed behind a store's window.

Deanna sighed and looked at Jeremi. She could tell what her daughter was thinking. No woman in the world had not once anticipated themselves putting on a wedding dress for their loved one, and Heather was no different.

Deanna took a step forward and grabbed her daughter's hand. With a smile, she said, "Let's go inside and try it on." "It's all right... Why would I try on a wedding dress when I'm not planning on getting married?"

Deanna raised an eyebrow. "I'd like to take some photos, so I want you to accompany me then."

Helplessly, Heather followed Deanna and Jeremi into the bridal store. At that moment, a staff member just so happened to have passed by the trio with a “wedding dress” in her hands.

Deanna immediately stopped the staff member and said, “That’s a beautiful wedding dress. Can my daughter try it on?” Jeremi’s eyes twinkled as he went with the flow. “It’s really beautiful, Mommy! Look!”

Heather’s eyes were completely glued to the white mermaid wedding dress, and a thought ran through her mind. ‘I suppose it wouldn’t hurt if I try it on.’ Thus, Jeremi accompanied Heather to the dressing room, while Deanna found a sofa in the lounge to rest. The staff members then put on some light makeup on Heather and placed a pearl headdress on her before finally helping her into the white mermaid wedding dress. When Heather walked out, even Jeremi was stunned.

“Mommy, you look gorgeous!” The stylist was still setting Jeremi’s hair since the little boy kept on moving around. Heather then walked over and pressed Jeremi’s shoulders. “You stay here and let the stylist work on your hair. I’m going to go show Grandma the dress.”

“Okay!” Jeremi nodded his head,

Heather walked out while holding the hem of her dress, where she just so happened to have stumbled across Daniel and Kasey.

The three of them looked at one another, each of their faces filled with different expressions.

Heather’s gaze fell on Kasey’s white tube top dress and felt her heart being pierced. ‘The two of them look like they have a nice relationship going on still.’

Heather then had a slight frown on her face and felt embarrassed with herself for having such thoughts. She hated herself for thinking that Daniel might still have a change of heart, when he had already made himself clear to her five years ago.

Her first instinct was to leave that place, but Kasey stood in front of her, blocking her path.

The woman had a smile on her face as she extended her hand with blue painted nails. “It’s been a long time, Heather.”

Heather forced a wry smile and reached out her hand to shake Kasey’s. “Long time no see.”

“I didn’t think you’d come back here again. How have you been for the past five years?” Heather tilted her head. “Very well.” Kasey raised her eyebrows. “That dress looks really beautiful.”

Heather maintained her cool, curling her lips as she said, “Thank you.”

Kasey raised her eyebrows once more. "It's much nicer than the one I'm wearing."

Finding it strange, Heather could not understand why Kasey would say such a thing. Immediately after that, Kasey pulled Daniel over. Leaning against his shoulder, she asked, "What do you think, dear?" Daniel sized Heather up, his eyes still filled with the same darkness and cool in them. Then, he turned to look at Kasey and answered, "Your dress is much nicer."

Kasey curled her lips upwards. "Really?"

Kasey's expression made her personality seem even more exaggerated. She then looked at Heather and teasingly said, "But I still think the one she's wearing is nicer." Heather's face turned slightly pale. She could guess what was going to happen next.

Sure enough, Daniel waved his hand and said to the staff member, "My fiancée likes this dress."

The staff member immediately understood what Daniel meant when he pointed at her.

"I'm sorry, Miss, but I'm going to have to ask you to remove that dress. We'll find you another piece to try on instead." Daniel was the Alpha, so they had no choice but to follow his orders. Heather could feel her legs trembling slightly, but she bit her lip and forced down the words she was about to shout through the top of her lungs. Instead, she nodded her head and said, "Okay." 'I'm just an ordinary werewolf, so I have no right to say no to them... 'It's just a dress, so what could I possibly do if Kasey wants it and Daniel's helping her take it away?'

Heather mockingly laughed at herself and followed the staff members, returning to the dressing room. When Jeremi saw his mother returning, he immediately jumped out of his chair. "Has Grandma seen it yet?"

Heather smiled and lied, "She has, but... She says that this dress doesn't suit me. I'm going to change into another piece." Jeremi pouted his lips. "It looks really nice, though!" "I should try on another," Heather helplessly said. She then turned around and drew the curtains before removing the mermaid wedding dress.

Heather frowned and felt it was a shame because she quite liked the dress.

Meanwhile, Kasey and Daniel entered the dressing room while Heather was taking it off. Jeremi instantly understood what had happened when he saw the staff member handing the dress over to Kasey right after they took it off Heather.

Under the staff member's guidance, Kasey gleefully entered another dressing room, not realizing that Jeremi was even there.

After that, Heather walked out with an extremely ordinary dress. The smile on her face completely disappeared.

Jeremi ran to Heather and frowned. "Mommy, that dress just now was much better. Did the bad woman take it away from you?" Heather shook her head and said nothing, grabbing Jeremi's hand before they left.

However, when they passed by Daniel, the man suddenly grabbed her arm. Daniel turned to look at Heather, and his grip on her tightened. "Who are you wearing that wedding dress for? How come I wasn't aware that you're about to get married?!"
