

Chapter 17

The next day. Molly woke up early. She tied her long hair up and put on an apron before preparing breakfast for three of her children. The meal consisted of flavorful risotto, baguettes, and some toast. "Mommy." Alex's adorable voice rang behind her. Molly stood in front of the dining table as she looked in the direction of his voice. All she saw were three of her babies standing together in their fluffy animal pajamas, hugging their bolsters with a sleepy look on their faces, which made them look even more endearing. Molly's heart softened. "Go brush your teeth and wash your face. Get changed before you eat." "Okay!" The trio said in unison as they ran back to their room. They were done freshening up very quickly and walked out after getting changed before they sat obediently at the table. Knock! Knock! Someone knocked at their door just when they were done eating. "I'll get it." Claudia exclaimed as she hopped off her seat agilely and ran toward the door with her tiny legs. "Uncle Tony!" Claudia saw their visitor and greeted him politely. Molly looked over and realized that Tony was walking in with two bodyguards in black suits. "Ms. May, we're here to help you move." "Do you need to be in such a hurry? You're probably not done with the transfer procedures, right?" Molly found it amusing. Tony showed an apologetic look as he smiled and said, "Please be magnanimous, Dr. May. It's not ideal to delay the treatment. As for the procedures, it's the same if we settle it later. The Anderson won't lie to you about this. Besides, this is my boss's will too." Most importantly, Molly was erratic and unpredictable. She might even change her mind at the very next second. They were indeed very worried, so they wanted to start the treatment as soon as possible. Molly felt resigned as she had to move out even though she had just moved in two days ago. Fortunately, they have not set up their things yet, so they could easily pack their stuff and leave. "Well then, please help us with our luggage," Molly said. They walked downstairs in a row. Tony got behind the wheel, and they arrived at Terahis Grove in a short amount of time. They could see the massive mansion from afar, and it looked extremely luxurious. The community park was exactly a royal class landscape garden. There were various types of expensive trees and plants on display. The place was heavily guarded. Even the entrance had a security hut. Tony drove to the entrance, and the gates opened slowly the second he arrived. When they reached the mansion, Tony got out of the car first and brought Molly and three of her children to have a look around. The place was fully furnished with the latest AI system installed. The house was a lot bigger than their expectations, and the theme was a mixture of classic and modern styles. A pavilion in the backyard looked highly exquisite, which perfectly suited Molly's interest. The triplets loved the place and were looking and wandering around happily. 'However, the most important thing is...' Alex thought. Alex gripped the railing and asked curiously, "Which house does the uncle live in?" "Just next door," Tony answered truthfully with a smile. Molly looked surprised. "That's really near." "Terahis Grove is developed by the Anderson Corporation. They reserved several units for themselves, mostly to give as a gift to their business partners. The only ones left are these two units and the one next to this, which all belonged to my boss." Tony explained, "But don't worry, Dr. May. My boss lives alone, so this unit is useless to him. In fact, he had never lived here before too. However, we still get cleaners to clean up this place once a week." Molly nodded. "I need some time to reorganize the house, so I'll head over for his consultation in the afternoon." Naturally, Tony nodded and agreed, "Sure! Let me know if you need anything. The fridge is stocked up too, so you can use it to make lunch." Molly arched her brows slightly as she was still thinking that she would face some inconvenience as she did not have a car. If she took a cab, she might have trouble entering the neighborhood and shopping for groceries. She did not expect Tony to have everything sorted out for them. "Thanks," Molly said flatly. Tony was polite as well. "I'm just doing my job." Then, he turned and left. Molly went on to unpack the luggage with her three children. Around noon, Molly went to the kitchen and opened the fridge. She was shocked to see the various food stored in it. She picked out some ingredients and made a bountiful lunch. "Wow!!" The triplets stood next to the table as they exclaimed, "Lunch looks really delicious, Mommy!" "Of course! Today is the day we moved in, so I made a special lunch to celebrate!" Molly smiled as she spoke. Alex immediately responded, "Should we invite the mister next door over for lunch? We're going to be neighbors from now on, and this house is going to be transferred under our name. Besides, there were some misunderstandings between us and him in the hotel a few days ago, so this is the best time for us to be friendly." "Uncle Tony gave us the best service too, and it's probably that uncle's will. They also supplied this food, so it's only fair for us to treat them to a meal." Ben nodded as he chimed in. Claudia bounced around as she said, "The more, the merrier, Mommy! Let's go!" Molly was a little reluctant, but she could not stand her children pushing her, so she could only agree with a pout. "Go invite them over then. I'll make a few more dishes." "Yay!" The triplets cheered as they rushed next door and stood tip-toe to press the doorbell. Ding dong-
