

My Vampire System –

Chapter 1401 - Young Anger

As soon as Bony and Void got the call that Quinn wanted to announce something, every cell in their body was shaking with excitement. It was rare for Quinn to call on them, and the last time he did, they had witnessed something special.

Shortly after, like last time, Bonny and Void had announced to everyone that there would be a special broadcast to take place. This had caused a slight problem that had put the whole world on standby.

The announcement had been made that Quinn wanted to speak to the entire world, yet he didn't give any date or time. Actually, it was because Quinn himself was conflicted on when exactly he would need to call him. There were various things that needed to be ready before he could act, and he had no clue how long those things would take. In the meantime, the two of them just had to stay put in the Shelter until Quinn called them.

Of course, with this pent-up excitement, the reporters couldn't just sit around doing nothing, and the only people there besides Quinn were the two sisters and the leaders.

They had already done their fair share of talking to them, and the sisters weren't exactly in the best moods to talk either.

Because of this, at the moment, Void and Bonny were outside of the Shelter, strolling around, trying to see if they could spot one of the leaders to talk to.

They moved fast, so it was hard to keep track of them, and they weren't even sure if they would be able to track them down.

"Do you really think this is a good idea? Those leaders, as Quinn described, are a little scary." Void mentioned.

It wasn't Quinn who had updated Void and Bonny on who those strange people were, but instead, it was Sam. He thought since the world had now learned about the existence of these powerful vampires, it would be nice for Bonny to make a detailed report at some point.

Of course, he couldn't go into too much detail because he was unaware of how much information the vampires would be happy to share, but the good thing was, Sam had the King of vampires on his side. If he overstepped his boundaries a little, who would be the one to tell him off.

He just told the basics, that the vampires were made up of a council who made the decisions for them. These were the council members—some of the strongest vampires that ruled over the others.

"You know what the situation will be like," Bonny replied. "I'm sure you read some of those comments online. If we are going to make a report about them, we need to calm those comments too, and the best way to do that is to gather more information about them.

"Who knows, maybe you will see one of them healing an injured bird or something."

"Or maybe we will see them feasting on a human body." Void replied.

Eventually, after some time of roaming around, they spotted one of the leaders near the edge of the Shelter. This one looked to be one of the younger leaders and strangely had a cane in his hands. It looked odd because the leader seemed to have no problem walking.

At the same time, the young gentleman seemed to have a strange circular device in his hand. It wasn't anything they had witnessed before. There were engravings carved into the device and a crystal placed in the top.

The two reporters hadn't gotten close just yet; they were cautious and just watched the person for a while walking around until eventually, he started to lift the rubble effortlessly and chucked it over to the sides as if he didn't care about the place as a whole.

In the end, after clearing the rubble, the ground resurfaced, and the leader then placed the strange device on the floor.

"So now I'm just meant to stand here and protect this thing until the others are ready? this is so annoying, just like you insects!" The leader said aloud. As for who the leader was, it was none other than the first leader, Nicu.

"Do you think he spotted us?" Void asked as the two of them were hidden behind a pile of rubble.

"Are all humans this thick?" Nicu asked. "I can hear you; I can smell you. I knew you were there from the beginning. Just ask me what you want and leave."

The two reporters looked at each other, thinking whether they should go out and ask Nicu a few questions. After all, he hadn't hurt them till now, so he won't hurt them after the questions, right? Still, he did seem to be an aggressive leader; perhaps it would have been better to talk to one of the other leaders.

Then the thought occurred that maybe others might turn out even worse. Trying not to shy away, Bonny started walking forward, and Void turned on the camera, chasing right after her. He wasn't the best when it came to making decisions, but he would soon immediately follow Bonny if she were to go.

"I wanted to ask some questions for the report we are preparing on the leaders," Bonny said, carefully walking through all the rubble of the damaged structures. Eventually, she had reached the cleared space that Nicu had created.

"I see, so it looks like they have already made you somewhat aware of us," Nicu replied smugly. "Well, as he stated, I am the leader of the first family, Nicu Cain."

Since Nicu was being so polite, Bonny felt like she had no choice but to bow down, and Void soon followed.

"I wanted to ask you a few questions. Who is Quinn Talen to you, the vampire leaders? And earlier, you addressed him as 'your majesty', do you mind revealing how this came to be?" Bonny asked.

Hearing this question, Void thought that maybe Bonny was prying in too much. If the Cursed faction wanted to give this information, they would have already told them about it. Nevertheless, it was evident that she was being too meddlesome because the question seemed to annoy Nicu.

'I need to know. I'm sure Quinn is on our side, but are the rest of these council members on our side as well?' Bonny thought.

"Yes...Quinn Talen is an outsider. Unlike us, he was a human who was turned." When speaking, there was a clear disliking in Nicu's voice which was worrying the other two. This was what they were afraid of. "However..."

Nicu started to think back when Quinn had forcefully taken Arthur's weapon from him. In that instant, Quinn stated something that had touched him a little. He asked for him to be more like his sister rather than his father.

"The council has voted, and I follow the rules. Although I might not agree with where he has come from, he is rightfully our King. So I will follow his commands."

It was a satisfying answer based on their actions so far, it really did seem like they followed Quinn, and it seemed like even if they didn't like him, these leaders were for some reason, loyal to him. Rather than push for questions about the vampire's origins, and more about Quinn like she wanted to, she decided to ask about something else.

"The strange device that you just placed down. What is it?" Bonny asked.

"This? I guess I can inform you." Nicu replied. "All of the leaders have been given a device similar to this. The devices are to be spread out around the Shelter. Then when everyone is ready, we will inform Quinn. For now, I have to stay here to make sure the device stays intact."

Now looking at the device closer, it was definitely something Bonny had never encountered before. She wondered if it had anything to do with the announcement that Quinn would have liked to have made; it was at that moment that the receiver on Bonny started to vibrate.

"Are you ready?" Quinn asked. "The preparations are complete. It's time for us to send our message to the Dalki."

Chapter 1402 - The Movement

While Quinn had moved to the Beast planet solar system, the vampire settlement was still busy even without their leaders. A few days had passed since the leaders had been summoned, but the rest were assigned important tasks.

For now, the ones giving orders were the respective knights of each castle, as for who was giving them orders... it was none other than the new Royal knight, who was also busy.

Fex hadn't been summoned along with the others; instead, he was busy trying to coordinate all the information and tasks that had been left to him.

"Arghh, man, I'm really not suited for this stuff," Fex grunted as he sat down in a seat inside the Royal castle and gave out a big huff of air. Although many of the vampires in the settlement hadn't watched the broadcast, Fex had done.

The reason for the other vampires missing out on such a thing wasn't because they were disinterested. Everyone was a big fan of the new vampire king. They would have loved to see him. But it was due to the previous leaders. They didn't want the vampires to know anything about the regular human world.

Which meant they had no clue who Bonny or Void was or how to access their Livestream.

'Man, that was quite a cool moment he displayed, but it sucks about Helen. I thought the two of them suited each other more than the other one.' Fex thought.

Still, watching the Livestream only made Fex more frustrated, wishing that he would have been called as well, but he knew he had important tasks to do. Turning his head to the side, he looked at the person who stood there.

By his side, there was another vampire. One that he had only recently gotten familiar with.

It was a female vampire. She was young in terms of vampire age but was far older than Fex. She had short hair and a blindfold that was constantly covering her eyes. It appeared she was visually impaired, something that was extremely uncommon among vampires.

Due to their healing aspects, vampires could heal nearly any condition that came upon them. Still, there were times when vampires were just born with certain disabilities compared to others, just like humans. And for her, it was her eyesight.

'Well, at least the girl isn't bald like another certain vampire.' Fex thought and chuckled to himself quietly while looking around to see if he was nearby.

'Sir, I have just received an update from the Fourth family and the Ninth family; it looks like preparations are finally complete.' The girl spoke, but she didn't do it aloud; she had said using her ability to send a message directly to his head.

This was the power of the Eighth family, The Snacker family. Although, Bryce had disbanded the family after they had somewhat supported the second family. Quinn had decided to bring the family back slowly.

He thought their ability was important for the vampires. A way to communicate with each other without relying on technology was a handy thing; they realized its importance even more than before because the Dalki technology was more advanced than theirs.

This was why currently working under Fex, was a girl named Saya Snacker.

"Where are they able to find Nest Crystals?" Fex asked.

It took a while for Saya to reply, which Fex just assumed was her trying to communicate to the others. Surprisingly, Saya's ability was quite strong despite her not being a vampire trained to take the hier position. Fex sometimes wondered if it was due to her visual impairment. Perhaps her condition made her focus more on using her ability.

"Not yet, they will continue to investigate for the time being, but they are already sending over the Crystals needed," Saya reported.

This was good news. Fex was waiting for these specific type of bat crystals that they would use to create the special rings that allowed vampires to stay out in the sunlight.

There was still another problem though, the rings that were created from these crystals only blocked the sunlight for a few hours. It was a temporary solution, and for the time being, the vampires would have to stay indoors until Quinn came up with another solution.

In all honesty, Fex thought they should have waited longer before Quinn did what he was planning to do, but something had clearly happened that Fex was unaware of, which had angered Quinn, causing him to speed up the process.

A few more days had passed, and the rings had been made. They were then handed to each of the vampires, and a report was sent to them all, getting ready for what was about to happen next. Fex had also gathered the people during that time, as he had something of his own planned.

At the same time, Vampire Knights were sent to different corners of the settlement, and strange circular devices were placed all over the settlement.

Now, there was only one more thing to do. Fex walked down with the Vampire Knights from each of his families by his side. They had entered the tunnels located beneath the castles. Accompanying behind them were a large number of crystals taken from the Royal storage room.

Finally getting through the tunnels and having one of Muka's newly appointed vampire knights, they unlocked a combination to a particular room.

'I never knew this place was down here.' Fex mused, looking at what was happening in front of him. He knew some tunnels led to the tomb area and each of the castles. There they had multiple cellars.

This was because he had been held prisoner in these tunnels at one point. Still, in the centre, under the pooling area, he was unaware that there was another large space. When they entered, Fex could see a large circle on the ground. It wasn't a technological device. It just looked like a painting on the floor.

Someone had drawn several patterns and shapes in the circle, and characters he had no way of interpretation.

"What is all this?" Fex asked.

His sister, being the vampire knight of the thirteenth family, was currently with him at the time.

"You know why we are here, Fex." Silver replied. "This is the transportation device, although if you're asking what exactly is that, I am not sure. You would have to ask one of the Originals about it. It was just created so we could move the vampire settlement whenever we wished."

Fex stopped his questions there. He would rather not ask one of those originals for help. It seemed like whenever one of them was awakened, there was trouble, and that included the apparent good ones like Richard Eno.

"Saya, report to Quinn, tell him we and everyone are ready," Fex ordered.

After turning on the device, it would take a while to charge, and Fex needed to get his plan in motion as well.

After reaching this news, Quinn stood on top of the base. He looked far out and could see the leaders already in their positions with their hands raised. In front of him, Bonny and Void were now standing on top of the base as well. Behind them were Peach and Ivy. They had a casket that contained Helen's body inside.

When the two of them were ready, they gave Quinn the thumbs up.

[Summon]

It was then that all the leaders that had spread out around the Shelter, just like before, had appeared right by Quinn's side like some magic. Even the leaders couldn't get used to this. They were being forced to move against their will, but quickly they stood on either side of Quinn while he remained in the middle.

The red light on the camera could be seen rolling.

Standing there, Quinn looked directly into the camera.

"I have a message for everyone out there. The Earthborn Group, the Graylash group, Members of the Cursed faction, and all of those that are still on Earth. Lastly, I have an important message for you as well, the Dalki."

When saying the name Dalki, Quinn's eyes started to glow red with anger, and at that moment, they would receive his message loud and clear, including Graham, who was watching the broadcast, waiting to see what this message exactly held.

Chapter 1403 - The New Settlement

Once again, Quinn was making another impression on everyone. He didn't realize that he had also influenced the fighting that was going on the other planets.

During the time between the announcement was made and now, something special had occurred. After the Dalki had learned that Humans had reclaimed the Daisy faction planet from them, they decided to be somewhat patient.

This signified that most of the attacks that they had planned to orchestrate on the other planets were postponed. Those still on the planets were no longer pushing forward.

Although, Sach and Owen thought this wasn't good news either. The Dalki might have just been waiting for something themselves. They were always cautious but, at the same time, still not strong enough to go on the attack either.

Their fears were slightly true. The Dalki were focusing on increasing their forces at the moment. Before, they were on a time scale. Knowing their lives would come to an end at some point. But now, having one of the dragons, their situation had somewhat changed. So when Graham heard that Quinn had wanted to make an announcement, he decided to put things on hold.

For the last week, it felt like the treaty that was agreed upon between the Dalki and the humans had returned, and now, the person who had caused it all was about to address everyone again.

This was how much power Quinn had gained in that time. Just a simple announcement from him had managed to calm down the war.

On top of the base, everyone could see not just Quinn on the camera, but the leaders were standing behind him also. They stood straight and still, but what was gaining all the viewers' attention was Quinn's eyes.

They were burning after he had said the words Dalki. They could feel the anger in them even through the screen.

"The Dalki have taken many of our lives, our loved ones, and we are still in the middle of this damned war." Quinn clenched his fists "Even now, they have taken people close to me, members of the Cursed faction.

"It was because of them during the first war that I lost my parents, and then friends and others continued to die around me, and now the Dalki continue to do so.

"I'm sure many of you feel the same, and the truth is at the moment, we are losing this war. We have been pushed back to the point where we can't even leave our shelters safely. Is this the type of life we imagined? Even if we were to survive living like this, how long? How long would we last? Is this really a life worth living? For me, it's not. If we sit and do nothing, then eventually, the Dalki will win. All we would be doing is delaying what we know is coming.

"When speaking to you all last time, I talked about what we were. I admitted to you all that there were many members of the Cursed faction who were different to you. You gave them the name of V. It took a while but eventually, some of you accepted us. You accepted us through our actions, which was why I decided to show you. That these people beside me, their actions speak louder than words.

"Right now, the people who stand behind me are the leaders of the V. I won't lie; we know that there are some V that are working with the Dalki, but the ones behind me are different.

"The Humans, and the vampires, next to me, we both have a common goal. The vampires had chosen not to interfere in human affairs for a long period of time, but now there is something that threatens both of our species, and that is why they have decided to come out of the shadows, and this time, they, along with me, will help fight the Dalki."

When Quinn was speaking, the scene felt and sounded familiar to them. This was because, to the world, they had witnessed something similar happen before. It was when the first set of Originals had appeared. Those with abilities.

When the Dalki was invading the Earth, it was at its toughest times. Those with power had stepped forward, offering to help and teach others, fighting back the Dalki invasion. Once again, it looked like history was repeating itself with the so-called vampires.

"I know some of you will be frightened by these people by my side. I was at one point, but I, Quinn Talen, guarantee you that they will not harm you, and using their powers, using my power, we will get rid of the Dalki for good.

"Now that my message to the people is concluded, I will spare a few words for you, Dalki. I hope you are watching and listening to everything I say."

This time, even Sam was nervous about what would happen or what Quinn's words would entail for the rest of the world. Unlike in the past, Quinn hadn't asked Sam for advice on what to say. This time Quinn was acting on his own.

It was clear, Quinn was angry, and although the speech seemed somewhat soft in its approach. He wasn't asking the humans to work together with the vampires. He was particularly telling them what he would do.

Quinn turned to Muka and nodded her way. In her hands, she had a larger, circular device that looked similar to the small ones that Bonny and Void had seen in Nicu's hands; only this one was about three times the size.

Turning the dials around a few times, Muka then pressed on top of the crystal in the centre. At that moment, several lights positioned in different places could be seen in the shelter. Bonny and Void turned around and immediately told their drones to go up in the air to catch what was happening.

Just as they thought, the strange, almost bluish light they could see was coming from the smaller devices. The energy coming from them was so strong and bright they almost pierced the clouds. Then, the light from each of them started to spread out as if trying to consume the whole place.

Eventually, the bright light did just that, and soon, the light from each device overlapped each other, and the entire shelter was covered, including where the others were standing on the base. The feeling that everyone felt at that moment was similar to when they would go through the teleporters; as for where exactly they would end up, that could have been anyone's guess.

When the light finally faded, Bonny and Void found themselves in a strange room. Looking underneath their feet, they could see that they were now standing on a weird red carpet, and towards the very back, there was a throne.

"Film everything! Are you getting all this? I think we have just been transported to where all the leaders are from." Bonny whispered over to Void.

What was most impressive out of everything, though, was those that were in the room at the moment. All of the vampire knights had appeared, including Fex. They stood at the edge of the throne room in which others had teleported.

All were standing at an equal distance apart, lined up on either side. This clearly wasn't what Quinn had expected, and he looked towards Fex, who just smiled at him before lifting his hand and clicking his fingers.

'You want to make an impression right, well then you need one fitting for a King.' Fex thought.

At that moment, all of the knights in the room bowed down before going on one knee.

"We welcome back the family leaders and his majesty!" They declared in unison.

For a second, Quinn felt a little embarrassed at what had just happened due to its sudden unexpectedness, wondering just what Fex had made them do, but he had to quickly forget about that as he walked forward, regaining his composure.

Everything was still live, and his job was not yet finished. freewebnovel.com

"Come on... we're not done yet. There's still a lot I want to say to them." Quinn said, making sure Bonny and Void followed.

Chapter 1404 - No Fear, A Challenge

Everyone followed Quinn as he walked out, but he wasn't heading down the stairs or anywhere else; he was, in fact, walking towards his balcony, a space where the king would usually make a speech.

Upon reaching the balcony, Quinn looked down and could see all of the vampires had left their inner castles. They were now standing in the pooling area, all looking up at Quinn as if they were expecting him to make a grand speech.

Seeing them all there, Quinn found it strange. This was something he had never ordered; he just wanted them to be ready for the move, so he could only guess that it was something that Fex had arranged.

His hunch was right, and Fex had made sure to make everything more flashy than Quinn would have preferred.

The drones could be seen still in the air, which Void was surprised about. He thought that only they had been transported and figured they would be left behind. Still, he focused on the people below and filmed all of the architecture around them. They could see strange towers in places and the walls built with thick black material.

The castles, the walls, it looked like something they had never seen before, yet at the same time somewhat familiar. For instance, the Dalki fortresses that would be built had some striking similarities to these castles.

Before Quinn could even greet the people, all the vampires bowed down once again, and at the same time,

"We welcome your arrival, your majesty!" They shouted in sync.

Seeing this, Fex had the biggest smile on his face.

'It was a lot of work, and it took days practising this with everyone, but I think I have done a good job as a Royal Knight.'

Silver and the other vampire knights who hadn't followed were still in the throne room; upon hearing it, she just shook her head.

She felt like what Fex had done was a waste of time, but he insisted this was important for Quinn's plan.

It was then that Void noticed something with his camera in the distance, the sun that was out, and the fields they were on. The place looked oddly familiar.

"Bonny, I don't think we were the ones that were transported. I think that they transported this whole place to where the Daisy Shelter was."

They couldn't have been more right; even Ivy and Peach had been transported along with Helen's casket, which had been left in the throne room for now. They had looked at Quinn briefly before he moved to the balcony, and he gave them a nod indicating that it would be okay. freewebnovel.com

Seeing everything, those online were stunned in amazement; they had yet to figure out that the planet they were currently on was still the Daisy planet!

"Look at all those buildings; why does it look like something out of a period movie or something."

"There are so many of them. I thought there would be a few hundreds of V's, but their numbers are in the 1000s. Are they all as strong as the ones that we just saw?"

"I don't think so. He called them leaders. I'm guessing that guys are something special. Still, even the V's that we have seen so far are quite a bit stronger than normal humans."

"Let's not forget what they exactly eat as well; they feed on human blood. They see us as food. The only reason why they have probably decided to join the war now is so they can protect their precious food."

Honestly, Quinn didn't care what people thought of the place or the settlement; he was getting tired of always being cautious about how others felt. He was constantly pushing for good, trying to think hard about doing the right thing, and pleasing everyone.

During his time of rising to the top, meeting Paul, Nathan, Oscar, and even Vincent, he had learned it was impossible to please everyone. No matter how he did something, what way he did it, there would be those who were upset. So he needed to just care about the people he wanted to help, and this was the best course of action.

Before continuing on his message to the Dalki, he opened up his system screen and took a look; the title was being applied.

'It looks like it still works, this is excellent, and I have plenty of reputation points to use.'

Quinn then turned back to the camera, making sure Bonny had faced it towards him.

"You Dalki successfully took over this planet before, but you will never succeed again."

At that moment, using the system, certain areas of the settlement started to change. He moved his hands outwards, and the camera view switched to the drones above the settlement. The scene slowly changed, and a Great Wall began to form, bordering around the settlement, similar to what the Shelter had before.

Since the vampires were confident in dealing with whatever came their way, they never bothered to build walls around the Shelter. They did, however, have walls surrounding their inner areas near the castles.

Now, however, Quinn was making sure to build a high wall from the strong black substance around the entire Shelter. It was rising in milliseconds as if someone was using an earth ability, but this was clearly not an earth ability.

Once the wall was completed, Quinn then proceeded to add more things as towers similar to those staying outside the castle started to rise. Just by the tower walls.

This wall now protected the whole settlement, and lastly, gargoyle statues were placed on the outside of these walls. To make sure, any enemy who tried to attack would have a tough time. Bonny seeing everything, was left speechless.

They had never seen a power or an ability like this before; even the strongest earth ability users at most could build a large building or castle where they stood, but Quinn, from where he was, was able to create more, and they were complete structures that were definitely there for more than just show.

"This is the new Vampire settlement. Here shall Helen forever rests in peace.

"I invite you, the Dalki, Graham or whoever you are, to come here and try taking over this planet again. Try your best because I promise you, you will never succeed. If anyone attempts to take over this place, I will stop them.

"As long as I breathe, this place shall be protected. That's my invitation out to you... pathetic rats." Quinn held his head high as if looking down upon the whole race of Dalki!

Then placing his hand on the camera and clenching his fist, he destroyed it on the spot.

Void was at a loss for words, especially since his very, very expensive camera was suddenly turned into scraps. But with the Livestream ended at that point, Quinn had sent his message to the one person for whom it really mattered.

And, Graham had received it loud and clear.

"You think I'm scared? We will see, Quinn... we will see!"
