Chapter 1331

Ninian adhered to certain beauty standards. Her delicate features and small face looked innocent and lively, just enough to make people adore her.

She looked attractive in person. She would be even more popular once she appeared on the screen. With her appearance, she naturally belonged to the entertainment industry.

Nilson was taken aback by her beautiful and limpid eyes. He then said plainly, "Introduce yourself."

Everett, on the other side, frowned.

When Zayn noticed this, he asked, "Sir, do you need me to remind Mr. Lum who Ninian is?"

"No need," Everett said calmly as his frown faded.

Zayn looked at the screen again. He saw Ninian, who was treated equally, and was not affected by Nilson's tone of voice. Instead, she looked calm.

She smiled and said confidently, "Good day, Mr. Lum and everyone. I'm Ninian Winters, a newcomer in the entertainment industry. I've played the supporting role of Elliot White in "In Full Bloom". I wish to audition ..."

Her voice was soft and pleasant to the ear, like the voice of an angel.

Everyone had a smile and had a good impression of her when they noticed she talked about her acting experience

'Which one will she choose?'

Chester was drenched in cold sweats. 'I should've tricked Nilson and made him leave the audition hall.

'Will Ms. Winters choose the most difficult question out of pride and fail the audition in the end?'

He was begging Ninian to take the easier topic on the inside.

Soon, Ninian made her decision. "I'll take this."

As she spoke, she raised the paper in her hand, "Since it's been given to me, it'll be my topic. I don't plan to change it. Thank you for the offer, Mr. Lum, Mr. Campbell."

Chester whimpered, and his face became as white as a sheet.

Nilson was not surprised. He usually had an indifferent expression, but at that moment, he smirked.

"Good choice. That's what I like." Only a woman who was gentle on the outside and resolute on the inside could

She looked into the void, sounding as if she was venting, but also making a pledge at the same time.

She then looked at the "person" in front of her with a sinister smile, as if she had reached an agreement with her.

The more Chester thought of it, the more excited he became. Tears streamed down his face, and he began to cry loudly.

"Chester! Calm down!" Nilson said, "You're being too noisy! Shut up!"

"Shush, you stubborn donkey!" Chester said angrily. He leaned forward and hugged Nilson as he continued crying, wiping his tears and snot on his shoulder.

Nilson was so furious that he jumped away from him frantically.

People beside them were laughing out loud. Ninian could not hold back her laughter as well. Even though her face was still dirty, she was still a delicate little princess.

"Ninian, come forward."

Nilson finally pushed Chester away. He wiped off his tears and snots on his shoulders with tissue in disgust. He then looked at Ninian.

Ninian smiled and nodded before approaching him.

"I'm very satisfied with how you transitioned Hazel's emotions." He said, "I hope you can keep this state and portray "Hazel" to everyone."

Just when everyone thought that Everett would play dumb and skip the subject, they unexpectedly heard the young man's indifferent but deep and husky voice from the surveillance.

"Yes, I'm here."

Right after everyone heard his voice, they were shocked.

Was this the cold and heartless Everett? He was going against his public image!

"The Everett" was pampering the Winters family's little princess too much, was he not? He was even willing to show his love for her in public. He was really crazy in love with her.

Meanwhile, Ninian appeared calm as if this was a normal and usual occurrence.

She continued to speak with her soft and melodious voice. "Are you done with your work? Can I go to you?"

Once she asked, everyone in the room knew the answer.

Everett would definitely say he had finished his work. After all, based on his tendency to spoil his girlfriend, how could he possibly let Ninian wait for a long time?

All of her thoughts were buried in her heart as she quietly tiptoed out of Everett's office, leaving the space for him to work.

She then went to the resting lounge, closed the door, and took out her phone to call her father, Duke.

Their conversation lasted more than thirty minutes.

The Winters siblings had no idea what their younger sister had said to their father, but they noticed his long face throughout dinner. Adina, their mother, had to coax him a few times before his mood improved slightly.

But he was still unhappy.

George had asked Ninian about it privately, but he never got an answer.

Ninian looked at her brother's message and secretly stuck her tongue out. She would not tell her brother that she wanted to marry Everett sooner because that would increase her obstacles from one to two. That could quickly develop into multiple obstacles.

With that said, while she wanted to get engaged, she would only do so after achieving some small success. Otherwise, her daddy would forever see her as a child, and he would be hesitant about marrying her off.

Watching as Ninian spun around in circles anxiously, Everett held her shoulders and calmly asked, “What happened? You can tell me, and I’ll take care of it.”

Ninian was brought back to her senses by Everett’s deep and calm voice.

She blinked and slowly realized. ‘Wait, that’s weird. What am I afraid of?’

Her relationship with Everett had been made public, and the entire country was aware of it. But why was she acting no different from when she recently returned to Cairnstan and sneaked into the entertainment industry, afraid of being discovered by her family?

She was confused.

Everett’s heart sank when he saw her dumbfounded and remaining silent. He pursed his thin lips lightly.

He took the phone from her hands and said, "Hello, Ms. Ward. This is Everett."

He pinched her flushed cheeks with both hands and laughed as he said, "Why are you still afraid of letting your family know about this? Didn't this son-in-law meet his in-laws a long time ago?"

Ninian's face turned a deeper shade of red after hearing that.

"That, uh, that's a misunderstanding--"

"Silly, don't worry about stuff like that anymore." Everett lowered his head to connect their foreheads, and feeling a bit sad, he said, "I want things to be official. If everything goes well, we'll marry as soon as possible. If things don't go as planned, we'll get married later. I've reserved my place next to you."

After hearing that, Ninian's eyes formed crescents, and she smiled. "Okay."

The Internet's reactions were swiftly increasing, and just as Amber predicted, shortly after Everett and Ninian's video went viral, the production team of "Turncoat" officially announced that Ninian would play the female lead.

"Defenders? What defenders? Are you talking about soccer now?" With wide eyes, Nilson asked.

"No, not those types of defenders! What I mean is that someone stepped in and is explaining on Ms. Winters' behalf! But it's not one of our people. It's defenders from outside!" explained the staff.

"What?" Nilson immediately stood up. "Let me see!"

The staff quickly handed the phone over to him, and the website page on the screen kept on refreshing.

However, to the surprise of those haters, Ninian, who was acting for the first time, not only did not drop the ball on any of her performances in the Oscar-level mission, but she also managed to portray her own charm and personality in the character very well.

From her gentleness and firmness at the start to the grandeur during the protest to her enthusiasm and passion even when captured by the enemy and taken to the execution ground, her character arc represented the experiences of countless revolutionary predecessors.

She had absorbed the spirits of many ancestors into her body. Seeing her alone demonstrated the bravery and unstoppable power of Cairnstan’s youth.

Before she was executed, she looked at the rising sun and showed a gentle and firm smile.

In the end, gunshots rang out, and her body dropped to the ground. However, the sun rose all the way and illuminated the earth.

Numerous people were moved and went wild at the scene where she smiled.
