

Madam Winters's Fight For Her Children Chapter 1001-1005

Chapter 1001

Adeena slammed the car door shut before she speedily walked toward the girl.

When the girl heard the sound, she turned around. Her big, black eyes shone brightly, reflecting Adeena's figure.

"Miss, do you know how to get to Golden Sun Orphanage?"

The girl's voice was soft. It was sweet yet not greasy, like the sweetest milk candy that was dipped in chocolate sauce for a while.

Adeena's heart instantly melted. She squatted down and tenderly said, "Of course, I know. Let me bring you to Golden Sun Orphanage, okay?"

The little girl nodded decently. "Thank you, Miss!"

Adeena's heart melted. She could not help but lift the girl and carefully put her into the passenger seat at the back. It was only after she carefully buckled the seatbelt for the little girl that she softly asked, "Girl, why did you leave the orphanage alone?"

"Cherry said she wants to eat marshmallows. She gave me $2 and asked me to buy some marshmallows back." The little girl blinked and said, "Miss, can we buy some marshmallows before we go back to the orphanage?"

Adeena held the steering wheel with a faint smile and said, "Of course we can, but you're too small. You can't come out and buy marshmallows alone again."

"But Cherry wants to eat." The little girl held her hands. "Cherry said I could take a bite too."

Adeena's heart suddenly soured.

Why would such a cute girl be abandoned in the orphanage? She also needed to take a bite off another child's marshmallows.

When she looked at the girl, who sat obediently in the back, through the rear-view mirror, she felt pins and needles in her heart.

The little girl did not behave pitifully at all. She blinked her big eyes as she said, "Miss, you're so kind. You're even gentler than Mama Sherry. I like you a lot."

Adeena gently smiled and said, "I like you a lot too. What's your name?"

"My name is Grapie. Since my eyes look like grapes, Mama Sherry gave me the name, but..." The little girl sniffed. "I've never eaten grapes before."

Adeena's fingers tensed up.

Ever since she could remember, she had never gotten involved with such a young child. She did not know if all the children were this adorable, but she was captivated by the girl's watery, grape-like eyes.

She suddenly had an urge to adopt this kid.

However, she knew that unmarried women could not adopt an orphan.

"Grapie, I'll take you shopping. You can buy whatever you like."

She stopped the car in front of the nearest supermarket.

Grapie's eyes lit up. "Miss, I just want some marshmallows. Cherry's still waiting for me."

"It's okay. I'll drive you back later. It'll be very quick." Adeena held her soft hand and walked into the supermarket. She basically bought everything that a kid needed. She ended up buying a trolley full of stuff simply from walking around.

Grapie's expression was full of resignation. "Miss, you really don't need to buy all this. I don't need so many things. The orphanage has everything.

If there was everything, how could she never eat grapes when she was already three years old?

Chapter 1002

Adeena suppressed her gloominess before she grinned and said, "When I send you back, I'll have to bring some presents for the other kids too. These are the presents."

Indeed, many people, young and old, frequently sent gifts to the orphanage, so Grapie nodded. "Thank you, Miss!"

With that, Adeena drove her all the way to the orphanage.

It was a medium-sized orphanage in Cloud City. There were two old, used houses that were painted in yellow and blue. Many kids were playing in the courtyard.

"Mama Sherry, I'm back!"

When Grapie pushed open the car door, she instantly rushed out into a forty-year-old woman's arms.

“Grapie, you’re so disobedient. Where did you go alone? Do you know that everyone’s been worried sick?” The director purposely darkened her expression and scolded her. “If this happens again, you know your punishment!”

Grapie stuck her tongue out. Then, she turned around and looked at a four-year-old girl who was standing behind the director. “Cherry, I bought you some marshmallows.”

She turned around, took a pink marshmallow from Adeena’s hand, and handed it over.

Only then did the director notice that someone had sent Grapie back. She quickly walked over and said, “Thank you for sending Grapie back. She’s usually very obedient. I don’t know why she would sneak out on her own today.”

Adeena looked at the little girl gently. “She mentioned that she wanted to buy marshmallows for Cherry. She took $2 and walked around half the city.”

Right after she spoke, the four-year-old Cherry suddenly slapped Grapie on the back of her hand.

The pink marshmallow fell to the ground, and a lot of dust and grass clippings made it dirty.

“Why did you come back so quickly?” Cherry instantly lost her cool, and hatred shone in her childish eyes.

Before the director could react, Adeena rushed over. She held Grapie, who was on the verge of crying, in her arms and glared at the girl. “You’re Cherry, right? Grapie purposely sneaked out to buy you marshmallows. Is this how you thank her?”

“Hmph!”

Cherry turned around and ran away.

“This girl!” The director sighed. “The two kids were quite close in the past. I don’t know why, but Cherry’s been getting increasingly bad-tempered.”

Grapie’s eyes became teary. “Cherry said I stole Mama

Sherry’s heart, so she doesn’t like me anymore. I want her to like me, so I agreed to go out and buy her marshmallows. Why does she still not like me after I bought her marshmallows? Sob...”

The sad little girl cried.

Adeena felt so heartbroken. She took a deep breath and softly said, "Grapie, you're not chocolate or ice cream. Why would everyone like you? Cherry may not like you, but there are still many other kids, right? It's good enough that everyone else likes you."

The director suddenly slapped her thigh. "I realize why Cherry would suddenly make Grapie go out. A married couple's coming to the orphanage to see the kids later, and they're planning to adopt a girl. Cherry must have learned about this. She got rid of Grapie because she knows that she isn't as pretty as Grapie."

Adeena trembled with fear.

A four-year-old girl could be so cunning.

Was it in her nature or had she slowly learned such tactics in the orphanage where only the best would remain and the worst would be eliminated?

If Grapie turned out like that one day, it would be like throwing a piece of jade or jewelry to the ground, breaking it into pieces.

Chapter 1003

Adeena brought a lot of snacks and toys that were loved by children, so the orphans jumped and ran around happily.

She was supposed to leave after sending Grapie there.

However, she suddenly felt reluctant when she saw the little girl's clear eyes.

Half an hour later, a married couple would come and adopt a girl. Grapie looked so cute, so she would probably be adopted.

Adeena wanted to know which couple would become Grapie's parents.

"Ms. Adeena, can you stay with me a little longer?"

Grapie tugged on Adeena's sleeve and spoke pitifully.

Adeena carried her. "Of course."

A four-year-old girl hid at a corner not far away; it was Cherry who had left angrily earlier.

She used to be everyone's favorite child in the orphanage, but after Grapie grew older, everyone only had eyes for Grapie.

When visitors came to spread their love, they would give all the delicious and fun things to Grapie first.

Whenever a married couple came to adopt a child, they would want to take Grapie home.

However, those couples ultimately wanted to adopt a boy, so although Cherry had been jealous of Grapie all these years, she never went too far.

That was, until yesterday. She had heard from Mama Sherry that a married couple wanted to adopt a healthy child, but the remaining boys in the orphanage were disabled, so they had to adopt a girl.

She knew that this was her chance.

Hence, she tricked Grapie into going out early in the morning, but Grapie came back before the interested married couple arrived.

She even brought back such a beautiful and gentle woman.

Cherry's eyes were full of jealousy when she saw Adeena and Grapie hug and speak intimately.

She walked out of the corner and waved. "Grapie, come over. I'd like to apologize to you."

Grapie immediately left Adeena's arms. "Ms. Deena, I'll go and talk to Cherry. Please wait for me."

When Grapie walked to the corner, Cherry dragged her in.

"Are you proud now?" Cherry grabbed Grapie's collar, gritted her teeth, and said, "You'll have parents today, and you'll leave the orphanage soon. Are you ecstatic?" Grapie widened her eyes. "Cherry, didn't you say you wanted to apologize?"

"You should apologize to me!" Cherry lowered her voice and said, "You want to steal my parents. You want to steal my home! You're the worst kid in the world!"

"No... No, I don't want to!" Grapie slowly walked back. "I don't want to leave the orphanage. I don't want to leave Mama Sherry. I don't want to leave so many friends here."

"You're lying!"

Cherry pulled her with great force.

Every orphan's biggest dream was to have parents, and their biggest hope was to have a home that belonged to them.

"You're hurting me."

Grapie hunched her shoulders in fear.

Cherry pulled again and ended up tearing off the necklace around Grapie's neck, dropping to the ground.

It was a jade necklace with a faint cloud carved on it.

Cherry immediately picked up the necklace. "If you steal my parents, this will be mine! If I'm adopted, I'll return this to you!"

After she spoke, she turned around and left.

Chapter 1004

Grapie opened her eyes widely and tried her best to hold her tears back.

Buzz!

Adeena's phone vibrated.

After she answered the call, she regretfully came over and looked for the little girl. "I suddenly need to handle an emergency, so I'm going back now. Grapie, can you give me a goodbye kiss?"

Grapie instantly held her neck. "Miss, I don't want you to go."

Her favorite necklace was stolen by Cherry, but she held herself back without crying. But when she thought about Ms. Deena wanting to leave, her tears just streamed down her cheeks.

"You're a good girl. Don't cry. I'll still come and visit you again."

"But... but Cherry said I might be adopted today, and I can't see you again."

"I'll come and ask Mama Sherry where your new home is. I can still go and visit you." Adeena smiled and said, "You're so obedient and cute. If you keep crying, you'll become ugly."

The little girl sniffed and held back her tears.

Adeena touched her head, and she left while she kept looking back.

Right after she left, a married couple who rode on a motorcycle stopped in front of the orphanage.

This couple was about thirty years old. The man looked sincere and honest, while the woman looked virtuous and graceful. When they walked inside, they were welcomed by the director warmly.

If a child from the orphanage was successfully adopted, this would be a perfect ending for everyone.

The director tried her best to make this work, and the couple indeed wanted to adopt a kid. The remaining boys in the orphanage were either diagnosed with congenital heart disease or mute and dumb. After the couple looked around, they finally cast their sights on Grapie.

“Sir, Ma’am, please adopt me.” Cherry bumped Grapie in the shoulder and squeezed her out of the way. She was the first one to stand out. “I’m Cherry, and I’m going to be four soon. I’m a good girl, and I’m very obedient. I can sweep the floor, wash clothes, and work. Please take me home with you.”

She opened her eyes and forced herself to drop a few tears.

The sincere and honest man was Candon Harris. He always listened to his wife. He turned around and asked,

Adeline, what do you think about this girl?”

Adeline Porter shook her head gently. “She’s too quick witted and cunning. We won’t be able to control her.”

She glanced around the bunch of kids.

All the girls were smiling and looking at her with expectations.

Except...

The girl was about three years old. She wore a goose yellow shirt, and her skin looked fair and tender. The girl lowered her head and tried to reduce her existence.

From this angle, she could see the little girl’s long, thick, curly eyelashes like little hand fans.

“I like this girl.”

Adeline pointed at Grapie. When she saw her husband nodding, she waved her hand. “Girl, come over here.”

Grapie raised her head and felt hesitant.

“Grapie, hurry over! This lady likes you!” The director urged.

Most of the married couples who had come to adopt kids over the past few years wanted a boy, and it had been three years since a girl was successfully adopted from the orphanage.

If Grapie was successfully adopted, it could attract many couples who did not have a kid to come.

As the director of the orphanage, Sherry's biggest dream was to give every kid a happy and complete home.

Grapie dared not look at Cherry, and she slowly walked over.

"Your name's Grapie, right? You're really pretty. Can you take me on a walk around the orphanage?" Adeline squatted down and gently asked. The director mentioned that if she wanted to adopt a child, she could ask the child to take her around the orphanage and cultivate their relationship that way.

Chapter 1005

"Ma'am, do you want to adopt me?" Grapie slowly asked as she opened her eyes wide.

Adeline was stunned before she smiled gently and asked, "Are you willing to be adopted?"

Grapie pointed at Cherry on the side. "Cherry's more obedient and understanding than me. Can you adopt Cherry instead?"

She knew that Cherry was desperate for a home and parents.

She could give this opportunity to Cherry.

"Grapie, what nonsense are you talking about?" The director purposely put on a stern look. "Adeline likes you, and it's your lucky day. Why are you pushing your luck away?"

Grapie lowered her head and anxiously clenched her fingers.

"Hmph! All of you don't like me!" Cherry shouted in anger before she turned around and ran away.

Candon subconsciously thought that his wife was right. The girl whose name was Cherry was too cunning, and the ruthlessness in her eyes was too strong. A normal family like them could not afford to raise a child like that.

"Grapie, I like you, and only you. I can't give the feeling away." Adeline gently tussled the little girl's soft hair. "If you like me too, can you be our daughter? I don't have a child. Once you come with us, you'll be our only daughter. You'll have your own room, you'll go to preschool with other kids, and you'll have a lot of toys. Most importantly, you'll have parents and a warm family."

Grapie's eyes lit up. "Will I really have my own home?"

"Of course!"

Adeline's smile became much kinder.

Candon squatted down as well. "If you become our daughter, we'll give you the best things."

Grapie smiled and nodded hard. "Daddy, Mommy!"

"That's wonderful!" The director grinned and said, "Mr. and Mrs. Harris, please follow me for the adoption procedures."

After the adults went off to handle official matters, Grapie searched for Cherry everywhere.

"Are you looking for me to get this back?" Cherry raised the jade pendant with the cloud in her hand.

"You stole my parents, so I'm taking your necklace. It's only fair!"

"Mama Sherry said my biological parents gave it to me. Can you give it back to me? After I go home with Daddy and Mommy, I'll buy you a lot of food and toys," Grapie said tearfully.

"If I was adopted, would I still need you to buy me things?!" Cherry yelled. "You're a thief! You stole my parents! I hate you!"

She threw the cloud jade pendant with great force.

A big group of kids had been playing in the courtyard, and they scattered. In the end, no one knew who picked it up.

"Grapie, the paperwork is done. From now on, you have a Daddy and a Mommy." Adeline held Grapie's soft hand. "Hey, why are your eyes red? Who bullied you?"

The little girl moved her lips. She wanted to say something, but she held back.

The necklace had been given by her biological parents. If her new parents knew that she was still thinking about her biological parents, they would be very sad.

"I'm okay. I just don't want to leave Mama Sherry," Grapie said obediently.

The director chuckled and said, "You're a lovely little girl. Run along with your parents. When you have time, don't forget to come and visit me."
