

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 14 –

Chapter 14

Rosalie knew nothing of what had happened at the kindergarten.

She went to the research institute her teacher had set up in Somerland to report herself after leaving the kindergarten.

She saw a handsome and elegant man dressed in a pressed shirt and pants coming toward her the moment she entered the research institute.

“Rosalie, welcome back. I’m glad to be able to work with you again from now on.”

Yves Graham stood in front of her and extended his hand toward her in a gentlemanly fashion.

Rosalie nodded slightly as she reached out to shake his hand before quickly pulling away.

Yves had also worked with Quentin’s team back then to execute R&D matters abroad.

During that time, Yves had worked as her assistant. Since he graduated from a famous school, his ability had been commonly recognized by her and Quentin.

Rosalie’s attitude was neither hot nor cold and Yves did not mind it either. He smiled and said, “I’ll bring you to your office.”

With that, he turned to lead the way while introducing her to the structure of the research institute as well as its key personnel along the way.

Yves smiled and looked at Rosalie when they reach the office. “I had someone decorate this space for you based on your preferences back then. Linda’s workstation is outside.”

Rosalie looked around and nodded with satisfaction. “How thoughtful of you, I appreciate the trouble.”

Yves was stunned for a moment. The smile on her face looked a little gentle and her voice was as warm as jade. “It’s all right. No need to be so courteous with me.”

He was unable to hide the fondness he felt for Rosalie in his gaze as he said this.

He felt no less adoration toward her even when he knew that she was the mother of two.

After all, Rosalie was a truly excellent woman in every aspect, so much so that it covered all her shortcomings.

Rosalie did not notice the way he looked at her.

After giving the office a once-over, she said to Yves, "I came here today to learn about the institute's particular operation. Could I trouble you to bring me around?"

Yves smiled as usual, "Sure."

Rosalie nodded calmly and motioned him to lead the way.

Yves turned around and walked in front, there was a slight bitterness in the smile on his face.

He liked Rosalie, but she only regarded him as an ordinary subordinate.

It really...gave him a headache.

The two left the office area and went straight to the core area of the research institute.

When they arrived at the experimental area, they saw the researchers who were dressed in experimental garb and masks busying themselves on their various test benches.

Rosalie did not bother them, but asked Yves to briefly introduce the various projects along with their progress.

When afternoon came, Rosalie had more or less a complete understanding of the situation in the research institute.

At the same time, she noted a crucial problem.

When they were touring the experiment area previously, there had been a basic work area, but it was not in operation.

Rosalie had questioned the experimenters and learned that they had run out of drugs and were still waiting for the research institute to distribute them.

This was the case for the following few.

Since the drug supply had not been timely, several research projects had to be put on hold for the time being, and the time cost of these projects had greatly increased.

Before they knew it, it would also lead to great losses for the research institute.

Exiting the test area, Rosalie frowned and looked at Yves seriously, "What is the issue with research being shelved due to the slow supply of drugs? Did you not try to solve it?"

Most of the readers are now reading this novels:-