

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 384

The air pressure in the private room plummeted sharply.

Andrius internally shivered. He was hesitating whether to tell him the rest.

“Why are you asking this?” Byron frowned and glanced at him.

Andrius cleared his throat and said as if nothing had happened, “Yesterday, she came to examine the old master. I suddenly recalled your relationship to be rather good before, so I wanted to ask you if you two were still in contact...”

If they were no longer in contact, he would just mind his business.

The gaze of the person beside him suddenly darkened before he was even done talking.

Andrius felt like he had been seen through. He stopped talking and looked back with a puzzled expression, “what’s the matter, Byron?”

“Are you pursuing her?” Byron’s brows were tightly locked, and the emotions at the bottom of his eyes were vaguely mixed with some displeasure.

Hearing this, Andrius was instantly dumbfounded. His mind blanked out.

What had he said ever since Byron came in through the door that gave him that idea?

Dr. Jacobs was really nice, but he was aware of the relationship between Dr. Jacobs and the person in front of him. Even if it was a matter of the past, he would not engage in such an unjust thing.

Besides, when the old master tried to pair them up that time, Dr. Jacobs had already made her refusal very obvious. How could he have the cheek to pursue her?

Byron looked at Andrius with deep eyes, speculations running around repeatedly in his heart.

From the way he looked at it, although Rosalie had repeatedly made him angry, the woman was indeed eye-catching in all aspects. Hence, it was not surprising that Andrius would take a fancy to her.

Andrius had been hesitant to talk about why he was looking for him ever since he came in. It was obvious that this was something he found difficult to talk about.

Byron had more or less suspected the possibility of him saying this the moment he first brought up Rosalie.

However, thinking of this possibility, an unknown fire rose in his heart. The pressure around him was also frighteningly low.

The atmosphere in the private room was cold for a time.

After stewing in this atmosphere for a while, Andrius finally reacted to Byron's question that came like a bolt from the blue. He waved his hand repeatedly and denied it, "what are you even thinking about? I just noticed that Dr. Jacobs lost a lot of weight and then I thought about how you defended her before, so I wanted to ask if you two..."

Saying that, Andrius looked at the person beside him tentatively and carefully made a 'breakup' gesture.

What he meant to ask was whether Byron was no longer interested in Rosalie.

Hearing this, Byron's expression chilled. "I defended her before?"

Andrius nodded noncommittally, "when Dr. Jacobs was treating the old master before and during the incident at his birthday banquet. I saw it with my own two eyes. We've been friends for so many years. How could I not know you?"

Byron smiled ironically.

To the eyes of outsiders, it looked like he had defended the woman entirely.

Who would have thought that the woman would avoid him instead? She was even going to run overseas to avoid him!

Andrius noticed the change in his aura and felt his head ache more and more.

If Byron had nothing to do with this matter and cared about Dr. Jacobs... Then how could he not have expressed a word of concern despite Andrius saying so much? Instead, he remained cold this entire time as if someone owed him several hundred million dollars.

If he did not care about Dr. Jacobs, well, Andrius still had never seen his friend's mood fluctuate so much for a woman. Not only did he not interrupt him, he even went along with what he was talking about. Should Andrius bring up the matter or not?