

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 403

Seeing this, he frowned slightly, feeling puzzled.

The little girl had not seen Rosalie recently. Why would she suddenly dream till she cried when she had not been dreaming before?

“Lu and No said that auntie will take them abroad once she is done with the research institute.”

Estie thought of what the brothers said in kindergarten yesterday, her face was filled with disappointment.

She thought beautiful auntie had just lied to her, and Lu and No also told her that they would not be leaving.

Yesterday, however, they said that they would not be staying in the country for a long time...

Moreover, she had not seen beautiful auntie ever since she told her that she would be going abroad.

Thinking of this, the little girl could not help but want to cry.

Hearing what the little girl said, Byron’s expression slowly sank.

Based on what the boys said, it seemed that this woman would already be abroad if this incident had not occurred!

Estie tugged at the hem of her daddy’s shirt and said, “Daddy, Estelle can’t bear to be away from auntie.”

Byron put his thoughts away and held the little girl’s little hand soothingly, “Daddy knows, Daddy will have a good talk with auntie.”

Estie nodded. She was feeling muddle-headed again and yawned a little.

Byron put the little girl back on the bed and tucked the blanket for her, “Go to sleep, Daddy is here with you.”

The little girl turned her head and fell asleep not long after she was deposited on the bed.

Seeing the little girl’s quiet, sleeping face, he once again thought of what she said just now. Byron felt complicated.

After Estie was deep asleep, Byron then left the room with light steps and returned to his bedroom.

It was already early morning when he fell asleep after washing up.

The next morning, Byron felt his head throb.

Luther was already waiting at his office door when he reached the company.

Seeing him arrive, Luther quickly walked up to welcome him. "sir."

Byron nodded, his voice a little hoarse. "What's the matter?"

Luther brought out a document and turned a page to show him, "A problem has occurred with the project in s City. What they said over at s City is that they need a person in charge from our side to make a personal visit. Mr. York is recently in charge of another project and can't step away from it you see..."

Byron accepted it and took a look.

The issue with the project was not serious and it would be enough to send a project manager over there.

However... thinking of the place the other party had decided on, his heart thumped slightly and he said to Luther, "I'll give you an answer in a moment."

Luther complied.

Back inside his office, Byron took out his mobile phone and called Andrius.

On the other side, Andrius had just made an appointment with a medicinal materials business in s City and was about to call Rosalie to inform her of it when Byron's call came in all of a sudden.

Andrius picked it up without hesitation.

"Has the medicinal materials business in s city agreed on a time for that matter you mentioned yesterday? If not..." Byron said in a deep voice.

Andrius interrupted him with a smile halfway as he was speaking, "You are more anxious than Dr. Jacobs and she hasn't even pressed me about it yet."

Byron hummed noncommittally.

"It has just been decided, I was just about to call Dr. Jacobs," Andrius said.

Hearing this, he asked sternly, "when is it?"

Andrius looked at the calendar. "It's in two days, what's wrong?"

Byron nodded. "I got it."

With that, he immediately hung up the call without offering an explanation and called Luther over.

"Book a flight for me to travel to s City tomorrow. I'll make the trip myself."

Luther glanced at his master, puzzled.

He asked Byron about it just now, just because he was the head of this matter.

As for the severity of the project's issue, he knew it in his heart and Byron did not need to go there himself at all.

Since Byron has given his instruction, he did not dare question further and quickly complied.
