

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 406

On the other end, Andrius had also received an invitation from President Snyder although he was far away in Coast City.

Andrius was busy with work from Quirk Enterprises and naturally did not have time to participate in it. He then thought of his brother, however, and figured he might be interested. After ending the call, he immediately called Byron.

Andrius was about to speak the moment the call connected but Byron's voice came first, "Is Rosalie already here?"

Andrius choked, the smile on his face turned teasing. "She's already there. The partner in s city has invited Dr. Jacobs to dinner this evening and Dr. Jacobs has agreed."

Hearing this, he frowned slightly before answering with a deep voice, "I got it."

Without waiting for Andrius to respond after saying that, he hung up the call.

Andrius looked at the darkened screen of his mobile phone and raised his brow teasingly.

Although Byron did not clearly say it, he could guess that his figure would be making an appearance at the dinner.

s City.

Byron hung up the call when a knock came from the door of his room.

The Lawrences' partner in s City walked in with a smile.

"President Lawrence, here is our contract, take a look..."

There was no point talking about it. They had clearly discovered that the Lawrences were at fault first in this project. They wanted to leverage this and take advantage of them but did not expect it to be Byron himself.

Not only did they not manage to gain the slightest advantage, on the contrary, Byron had even picked through it without batting an eye. They almost lost their partnership with Lawrence Corporation.

Although Byron had been courteous toward them the past two days, he was reticent about cooperation.

The person in charge had practically subdued his approach to the lowest possible and without waiting for Byron to speak, he took the initiative to make changes to the contract in accordance with what Byron had said, still, he did not manage to gain Byron's affirmation.

The company was not willing to give up on the partnership with Lawrence Corporation just like that though.

Even if it was zero profit, being able to have a partnership with Lawrence Corporation was a gimmick to improve the company's status in the future.

The only thing that made them happy was that although Byron has not agreed with their plan even after a long time, he had not denied it either. In other words, it was still possible for the partnership to continue.

Due to this hope, the project leader had been reporting to Byron on time almost every day to inquire his intent.

Byron put one hand in his pocket as he looked at the person in front of him patronizingly.

The person in charge lowered his head slightly, his entire person careful.

After not receiving an answer for him after a long time, the person in charge internally cried but also did not dare urge him.

"I recall Gross Company being small scale in s city," said Byron leisurely.

The person in charge hurriedly answered honestly, "Our company is the best among the industry in s City."

Saying that, he looked at the person in front of him fearfully, afraid that he might have a new partner.

Byron nodded with satisfaction and replied, "I heard that President Snyder is having a dinner party tonight. I wonder if your company is ready to make an appearance?"

Hearing this, the person in charge subconsciously replied, "uhm... our company is not involved in the pharmaceutical industry, so President Snyder did not invite us this time..."

He felt Byron's questioning glance falling substantively onto his body after he said that.

The person in charge suddenly came back to his senses and tacitly replied, "However, if we were to take the initiative, President Snyder will not refuse US either."

Byron nodded noncommittally and said, "Have your boss bring the contract at night."

His words implied that he would be signing the contract with them at the dinner party.

The person in charge was secretly delighted. He quickly agreed and went back to the company to convey Byron's intention to the upper management.
