Chapter 41 Leaving Without A Chat? The process of taking out the needles was much simpler compared to putting them in. 10 minutes later, all the needles on the old master's body had been removed. Rosalie simply checked his pulse for a bit before calmly beginning to pack up her tools. Andrius and Andrea stood beside the sickbed, feeling very uneasy. They had found so many famous doctors before and it had all been in vain. They wondered if their grandfather would wake up this time... The slight curling of Old Master Quirke's fingers registered in their eager gazes. In the next second, the old master slowly opened his eyes. He frowned and coughed weakly. "Grandpa!"

Andrius hurriedly sat down to help the old master. There was shock but also delight in his eyes.

Andrea was too shocked to even speak

She never believed that woman, but her grandfather had actually woken up after the woman treated him.

"Grandpa, how are you feeling?" Andrius asked with concern after the old master stopped coughing. The old master nodded slightly. His voice was hoarse when he asked, "How long... was I asleep?"

Andrius was just about to answer when Rosalie came over after having gathered her things. "It's best if the old master doesn't talk too much now considering his condition. Let him rest more."

Hearing that, Andrius nodded and helped the old master lie down.

Then, he got up and thanked Rosalie. "Dr. Jacobs, I really wish to thank you. We suspected you before and I apologize for our ignorance. We were short-sighted. You're indeed an outstanding doctor."

Rosalie calmly accepted his apology and then replied, "He has only just woken up. The old master's physical condition is still grim. If you want him to have a complete turnaround, he'll need treatment at least six or seven times." Andrius nodded repeatedly. "In addition, as a supplementary treatment, I'll prescribe some medicine for the old master to recuperate his body since his health has critically declined. The later treatment will require some physical strength, and I'm afraid he might not be able to take it."

Rosalie continued saying to him. Naturally, Andrius had no objections. He nodded quickly and agreed. "Don't worry, we'll listen Chapter 42 A Tempting Offer For Her What Andrius meant was obvious.

Although she had not taken the initiative to mention the supply of medicinal materials, he was aware of her purpose and had even intended to take the initiative to talk to her about it. Rosalie, however, hesitated as she did not dare accept the reward without merit. After all, the Quirke family did announce in the beginning that they would sell the medicinal materials at half the price only if Old Master Quirke was cured.

She did not respond for a long time, and Andrius just stood there while he looked at her with a smile.

Seeing this, Rosalie also smiled. “To tell you the truth, I did indeed come to treat Old Master Quirke when I heard from a friend that the Quirke family would sell their medicinal materials at half price to the doctor who can cure him. But Old Master Quirke has only just woken up now, and the particulars of his situation aren’t clear. I don’t think it’s time to discuss compensation with the Quirke family, not until the old master’s health improves.”

Hearing this, the smile on Andrius’s face became even more sincere. “Dr. Jacobs, the fact that is able to wake up is already a great surprise to us. I absolutely trust you when it comes to the follow-up treatments. So, you already have a reason now to discuss compensation with me.”

Rosalie did not expect him to have so much faith in her. She was stunned for a moment before turning around to take a seat on the sofa.

“Dr. Graham introduced you. He once mentioned the research institution’s situation to me when he came by to look at the old master. But he said that there was nothing he could do and the matter could only be shelved.”

Andrius explained to her, “Now that he recommended you to come, it could only be related to the research institute, yes?”

Rosalie nodded slightly, then calmly spoke about the current situation with the research institute to him.

“The research institute has several projects, but due to the lack of medicinal materials, they’ve been stalled. We’re looking for medicinal material suppliers we can work with, but we've been rejected by almost every supplier in Coast City. Helpless, Yves thought of the Quirke family's situation and thought I could come and try."

With that, Rosalie looked at Andrius and explained seriously, "Of course, in Old Master Quirke's case, I would've tried my best to treat him even without compensation from the Quirke family. The compensation is just an opportunity."

Seeing her serious expression, Andrius had even more respect for her and sincerely answered, "Once again, I apologize for doubting you previously. You're a good doctor." Rosalie accepted it indifferently. Watching him with a calm gaze, she waited for him to bring up the matter regarding the medicinal materials.

Chapter 43 There's something Off With The Mood Having gained her word, Andrius replied with a smile, "Since this is your answer, I'm relieved. I'll prepare the contract tomorrow. Then we'll just need to sign it."

Rosalie nodded in agreement.

After discussing the compensation, Andrius personally escorted her to the door and watched her drive away. Watching her car drive off, Andrius then turned back into the house and called Byron. "How's Old Man Quirke?" Byron's voice rang out along with the sound of flowing water the moment the call connected. Andrius smiled and answered, "He's awake. Dr. Jacobs is indeed quite skilled."

Saying that, he recalled the strangeness between Byron and Rosalie just now and asked curiously, "Byron, have you met Dr. Jacobs... before? I kept feeling that the atmosphere between you two to be somewhat off, and I haven't seen you treat other women like that." She was heckled earlier, and he spoke up for her. At first, Andrius had actually thought that Rosalie was a fraud. Seeing Byron coming forward to help her and even requesting Andrea to apologize to Rosalie, he was confused.

He vaguely sensed that the two had met before, but he could not guess just what their relationship was.

Byron only answered the call because he was worried about Old Master Quirke's body. When asked this question, his expression sunk slightly. "I don't know her. If I had known her from before, I would've asked her to see Old Man Quirke."

Before Andrius reacted to what the other had said, the call was already disconnected.

Andrius found things even more strange when Byron hung up the phone like that. Byron's tone was very stiff just now. Did they really not know each other?

It was already late at night when Rosalie arrived home. Mary was accompanying the two little guys in the living room, putting Lego pieces together. Seeing that Rosalie had returned, the three put down their Legos and got up together to welcome her.

"Mommy!"

The little ones dove into her arms affectionately and asked worriedly, "Why did you come home so late? We're so sleepy now." With that, they closed their eyes and yawned.

Chapter 43 There's something off with The Mood

Rosalie caressed their heads with a smile. "I'm sorry to have kept you guys waiting so long." Saing that, she looked up and wanted to thank Mary. Mary could tell her intention and quickly waved her hand. "No need to be so courteous with me. These two are my godsons! You're the one who came back so late. Have you had dinner yet?"

Rosalie shook her head. "I was a little busy. I haven't had time to eat."

She was busy treating Old Master Quirke and discussing the supply of medicinal materials with Andrius just now that she did not even feel it.

Hearing her best friend mention it now, Rosalie then felt that she was a little hungry.

Mary looked at her helplessly, "I knew you'd be like this when you were busy. We saved you some dinner. Go and have some." The two little guys also urged her to eat. Heart warmed, Rosalie was pushed by two little guys to sit at the table where she simply ate something Mary accompanied her with two little ones at the side. Seeing that she had more or less eaten, Mary said with concern, "You came back so late today. Is the patient's condition very serious? How did it go?" Rosalie nodded with a smile. "The patient's condition is quite serious, but I think I'm confident I can cure him." Not only that, but she also successfully solved the research institute's medicinal materials supply problem. Thinking of this, Rosalie was in a good mood.

Mary was convinced. "If you say you're confident, that means you'll definitely cure him. I believe in you!"

Chapter 44 I'll Marry Him When I Grow Up The two of them chatted briefly, but as it was late, Mary then said her goodbyes and left.

The two little ones followed Rosalie around the room like they were her tails. After cleaning up a bit, Rosalie then had the time to turn around and care for them. "Did you guys have fun at kindergarten today? Did you guys get into trouble with the other children?"

The two little ones carefully recalled their time and nodded hard. "It was quite pleasant. When school was over today, the children stuffed us with a lot of snacks!" Hearing this, Rosalie could not help laughing. "Are you two so popular?" Nox nodded solemnly. He looked at Lucian beside him and said, "There was a girl today who said that she wants to marry Lucian when she grows up!"

"Really?" Rosalie looked at her son with amusement.

Lucian was stunned for a moment before he glanced at his brother, ears slightly red. "There was one, but I didn't promise her."

Nox pinched his ears and made a face at him. Seeing the little ones messing around, Rosalie's face was filled with smiles. Although it was already late, the two still spent some time pestering her and talking about the interesting things that happened at kindergarten. Most of the time, it was Nox who said a bunch of stuff while Lucian summarized it. Rosalie also listened to them carefully and laughed loudly from time to time because of how cute they were.

It was already close to 10 o'clock when they realized.

"You have to be quick. You two still need to go to kindergarten tomorrow!"

Rosalie retracted her smile and urged the two to go and rest. They listened to her and ended their topic of conversation before heading upstairs to rest.

In the morning of the next day, Rosalie sent them to the kindergarten before heading to the research institute.

Rosalie and Yves exited the conference room together after the morning meeting. "How did it go yesterday? Were you able to do anything about Old Master Quirke's illness?"

Yves expressed his concern.

Chapter 45 No Wish To Meet Him

She felt regretful about her best friend being the one who helped her fetch her children the past two days.

After dealing with work in the morning, Rosalie took the time to go to the Quirke household in the afternoon, thinking that she could pick up the two little ones by herself in the evening. When she arrived at the Quirke household, she checked Old Master Quirke's condition. Confirming that there were no complications, she continued with the treatment process and inserted the needles.

While she was extracting the needles later on, Andrius came in with a document. "Dr. Jacobs, this is the contract prepared. Take a look at it. If there are no problems, you can sign it."

This was what they had agreed on last night. Rosalie was not surprised either. She accepted it and looked it through carefully before leaving her signature. After signing the contract, Andrius' attitude toward her became even friendlier. "From now on, we'll have a working relationship. However, I still have to trouble you for my grandpa's condition."

Rosalie nodded. "It's what I should do."

The two chatted for a while. Rosalie looked at the time and removed the needles from the old master.

Although she had tried working on time, it was already past the time the kindergarten let out the children by the time she was done packing up her things. Rosalie quickly got up and said her goodbyes before driving to the kindergarten to pick up two little guys. She did not tell them that she would be late today and wondered if they would be worried. By the time she got to the kindergarten, it was already empty and almost all the children had left. Rosalie looked around only to find the two on the small chairs in the playground. She did not see an accompanying teacher, however. Seeing this, Rosalie quickened her pace as she walked over somewhat worriedly. "Mommy!" Seeing her, the two boys ran toward her happily.

Rosalie hugged them each in one hand. She caressed their small faces and said while crouching down, "Mommy was a little busy at work that I accidentally missed the time. I'm sorry."

Lucian shook his head sensibly. "It doesn't matter. Besides, we were also waiting in the kindergarten, and the teacher was with us. You don't have to worry."

Nox also nodded. Hearing this, Rosalie looked at them puzzled. "Is there a teacher with you?"

Chapter 45 No Wish To Meet Him

Lucian pointed to the corner of the playground. Looking in the direction he pointed, Rosalie saw that there was another slide there. The teacher was crouched there, talking to a little girl with a cordial smile. The little girl was dressed in a cute kindergarten uniform. Her hands were a little stiff on her knees. She was sitting very upright, but her eyes were fixed on them. Seeing the little girl's face clearly, Rosalie was stunned.

If she was not mistaken, that was clearly... Byron's daughter.

She also went to this kindergarten? Estie had been staring at Lucian and Nox longingly when she suddenly saw the beautiful lady. Her eyes shone instantly. Noting that the beautiful lady had seen her, she smiled happily and was about to greet her. However, the beautiful lady retracted her gaze in the next second. The corners of Estie's mouth fell as she looked at them somewhat aggrievedly. The beautiful lady had obviously recognized her but ignored her. "Mommy, what's wrong? Was work very hard today?" Noting that his mommy seemed a little out of it, Lucian shook her finger worriedly. Rosalie suddenly returned to her senses and said with a smile, "It wasn't hard." Hearing that, Nox happily gripped her hand tightly and jumped for joy. "Then let's go home!"

Chapter 46 Feeling Bad For The Little Girl

It was no wonder that the teacher had allowed the two to wait at one side.

However...

Thinking of the two individuals who would be appearing in a while, Rosalie was still hesitant. The teacher coaxed her softly for a bit, but Estie was unwilling to let Rosalie go no matter what.

After a while, the teacher asked Rosalie somewhat embarrassedly, "Are you in a hurry? If not, why don't we have a chat? I haven't told you much about Lucian and Nox after they joined the class."

Naturally, Rosalie could tell that the teacher just wanted to use the topic of Lucian and Nox to have her wait here with the little girl. The little girl was also looking at her eagerly. Faced with the little girl's gaze, Rosalie ended up not voicing the refusal that was already at the tip of her tongue for some reason. She swallowed the words and nodded to the teacher. Seeing her agreement, Estie's eyes shone bright again. She tugged the corner of her clothes and leaned carefully into her side. From a distance, it looked like she was leaning into Rosalie's arms. Aware of her small actions, Rosalie did not stop her or fret over her. She just casually chatted with the teacher about her two boys.

Chapter 47 Not Allowed To Like That Person "I recalled you came back from abroad. I suppose Lucian and Nox grew up overseas. I didn't expect them to be fluent with the local language."

The teacher had also just come up with an excuse for the time being. Lucian's and Nox's performance in class had been too good. At present, there was nothing else they could talk about, so they just discussed trivialities.

Rosalie nodded with a smile. "That's because there were many of our countrymen around us who communicated with them in the language."

The little ones said nothing but smiled obediently. They nodded along with whatever their mommy was saying.

Seeing that they were so good, the teacher could not help admiring them. "In addition to speaking our language and English, they seem to be able to speak F Language too?"

"Well, they learned it from my colleagues abroad."

Rosalie caressed their heads.

Hearing this, the teacher could not help but sigh. "If that's the case, they're too smart. Mastering three languages at such a young age, they must find the primary curriculum a walk in the park. They really are fine children. You've got good genes!"

Rosalie could not help laughing at the teacher's praise. "You flatter me. They're just studious." Rosalie kept thinking about how someone would be coming to pick up the little girl beside her while they chatted.

Taking a look at the time, it had been quite some time. Rosalie's heart constricted as she asked, "By the way, when will the child's parents be arriving?"

The teacher looked at the time and answered, "They should be coming soon." Hearing this, Rosalie nodded slightly and looked down at the little girl beside her. The little girl was standing in front of her obediently, still tugging at the corner of her clothes with her hand as if she was afraid of her running off.

Seeing this, Rosalie could only accept the fact that she could not leave and turned to look at the two boys on her other side. "Why don't you guys go wait for me in the car first?" They nodded obediently before turning around and walking toward the gate of the kindergarten

Watching them get into the car, Rosalie then looked back feeling assured.

Since she could not avoid meeting those two, it would be good to let them escape first.

At the gates of the kindergarten. Lucian and Nox opened the door and got into the car one after another. They leaned against the window and looked out.

"Say, why do you think mommy had us come into the car?" Nox held his chin, his expression puzzled. Lucian had been engrossed with putting their bags down properly. He got up, leaned beside him, and said with a tone of understanding, "That's because Daddy is coming soon." He did not know why their mommy seemed to really not want them to meet Daddy either.

However, she certainly did not know that they had already found out about their daddy's real identity. They even knew what he looked like! Two pairs of eyes looked outside expectantly. After a while, a Rolls-Royce ostentatiously stopped by the roadside. A tall man in a suit got out of the car. Nox had been paying attention since the car appeared. When he saw someone get out of the car at this moment, he stared straight at the person for a long time, even poking Lucian beside him. "Brother, look. Is that Daddy?" Hearing him, he turned to look at the man and nodded firmly. He could not have remembered wrongly. This face belonged to the person they had seen on the internet! Getting his brother's affirmation, Nox could not help boasting, "Daddy looks much more handsome than the photos online."

The moment he said that, his own brother glared at him. "Didn't I say before? We're not allowed to like that person!" He looked at the man walking outside sullenly as if he were facing a great enemy. This was the man who had abandoned Mommy and them! Having been lectured by his brother, Nox shut his mouth with a look of shame.

Chapter 48. The Two Who Have Daggers Drawn

She also was unsure of the reason, but she liked the lady very much. She even wanted to go home with this beautiful lady.

The atmosphere was somewhat in a deadlock. The teacher was just thinking of mediating the situation when she saw Byron, who had been silent, suddenly move..
“Estelle, let go and come back with Daddy.”

Byron walked toward Estie with his long legs and spoke to her in a harsh tone that he had never used before.

Estie was frightened by his tone. She grabbed Rosalie’s hand tight and subconsciously leaned into Rosalie.

She had been standing at the edge of the slide and did not pay attention to her feet when she moved, almost falling off the slide. Rosalie’s heart constricted all of a sudden as she hurriedly stretched out her hand to grab onto the little girl’s body. The little girl refused to let go of her, so she could only embrace her in her arms to prevent the little girl from falling down again. When she finally steadied the little girl, Rosalie could not help frowning. “Byron, if you have any dissatisfaction toward me, you can come to me. Why lose your temper on the child?”

Byron had also witnessed the scene but did not manage to go over in time.

When he heard this now, he replied in a similarly unkind tone, “How does how I treat my daughter have anything to do with you, Miss Jacobs? Don’t tell me you think that just because my daughter clings to you a little that you have the right to give a care?”

The atmosphere between the two was tense.

Hearing his sarcastic tone, Rosalie’s expression turned unsightly. She felt inexplicably angry.

Chapter 49 Daddy Was The Worst! She felt ridiculous after her anger subsided, however. She did not have the right. In his eyes, she had never been qualified... She laughed at herself. Lowering her gaze, she slowly and ruthlessly pried the little girl's hand that was gripping her clothes off without saying anything. The little girl wanted to reach out again, but her hand only caught air. "Lucian and Nox are still waiting for me. Be good and go back home with your daddy. I'm going to go look for them now." Rosalie caressed her head before putting her hands back on her sides. She hurriedly bade the teacher goodbye and then left without looking back. When she got to the car, the two little boys were already sitting down properly. Seeing that she had come, they asked her naively, "Mommy, what happened to you?" Rosalie took a deep breath and forced a smile. "It's nothing. Let's go home." With that, she started the car and drove away from the gates of the kindergarten. On the other side, Byron was still standing in his place as he looked at the teacher. "Her sons also go to school here?"

The teacher did not know what kind of history they had, but she could clearly feel the oppression from the man and was completely restrained. "Yes, Miss Jacob's twins are also in our school..."

Before she even finished, the man's cold voice sounded again. "When did they come?" "Just... a few days ago." The teacher answered carefully. "Inform the head of the kindergarten to remove the two children from the kindergarten immediately. Otherwise, the Lawrences will not invest a single penny in your kindergarten next semester!"

Byron's expression was chilling. With that, he picked up Estie and walked away without giving the teacher the time to react. Coming out of the kindergarten, the car that was parked beside his own was no longer there. Byron retracted his gaze after a glance and got in the car with Estie in his arms. Estie struggled to get out of his arms the moment they got into the car. Byron did not stop her and let her climb to the other side with her hands and feet. Estie took out a small notebook angrily and wrote on it vigorously.

Chapter 49 Daddy Was The Worst!

The sound of writing stopped after a while.

Estie was obviously angry. She did not come over to tug at his clothes as she usually would. She just sat there holding her little book while staring at him. Byron frowned. He sighed internally and looked at her. He saw a line of words written in the small notebook. (Why aren't you letting the brothers come to school?!] Seeing that her daddy had looked over, Estie raised the small notebook to his eyes angrily. Byron frowned slightly. He looked away and said coldly, "There's no reason. If you have to ask, it's because it makes me happy."

He felt movement coming from the seat on the other side when he said that.

Turning around, the little girl had angrily thrown the small notebook aside before moving herself to a position close to the window. She forced her head to face outside the window. Although she did not speak, the words 'I don't want to see Daddy' was written all over her body.

Byron raised his brow. "You being angry will not change my decision." Estie turned around again to glare at him. 'Daddy sucked! Daddy was the worst!' She liked the beautiful lady, and she also liked the two brothers.

Daddy, however, got into a fight with the beautiful lady and would not even allow the brothers to come study at the kindergarten!

Thinking about how she would not be able to see them again at kindergarten, Estie felt sad.

Daddy was really too unreasonable! She would no longer like him anymore...

Chapter 50 Fought With Him Estie sulked the entire journey home. Ignoring her daddy behind her, she went upstairs sulkily and locked the door angrily.

Standing by the door, Mrs. Zora saw the little lady's angry appearance and her master's expressionless one as he followed behind. She knew that these two had fought again. "Master, what's the little lady angry about?" Hearing the slamming of the door upstairs, Mrs. Zora looked at Byron with concern. Byron thought of the reason why the little girl was angry with him, and his tone was cold. "It's nothing. She's just throwing a temper tantrum. Look after her."

Mrs. Zora nodded as usual and agreed. "Alright."

She was also unaware why the little lady, who seldom showed her temper, was always getting angry at the master.

Considering the master's character, he was not one to coax another either. The point was, this family still needed a mistress. Estie was only angry at Byron. When Mrs. Zora came knocking, she still opened the door obediently. "Little Lady, come and eat something." Mrs. Zora brought a tray in, and it was carrying all of Estie's favorites. Estie had no appetite, however. She sat down at the table and ate two mouthfuls before pushing the plate away.

Seeing this, Mrs. Zora was distressed.

However, it was a matter between the father and daughter. She could not advise them. Hence, she removed the tray and took Estie in for a bath a little later.

When she came out after cleaning up the bathroom, she saw the little lady lying down on the side of the bed with a laptop in front of her. Her expression was sullen, and she was particularly serious as she tapped away on the keyboard. She did not know what she was doing.

Mrs. Zora was used to seeing the little lady tapping away on the laptop, so she did not ask much. She cleaned up the room and left.

On the other side, Rosalie was still on her way home with two boys.

Lucian and Nox were sitting quietly in the back. They looked at each other from time to time. They would also look at their mommy's expression through the rearview mirror.

They did not know what had happened in the kindergarten just now. Although Mommy had said that she was fine, they could both tell that she was in a bad mood.

Chapter 50 Fought With Him

"Mommy, we made greeting cards in the kindergarten today! The teacher asked us to make it for our favorite person so we made one for you!" Nox winked at his brother secretly. He nodded with understanding. "Mommy, do you want to know what we wrote?" Rosalie knew that they were trying to cheer her up, so she cooperated with them. She smiled and nodded. "What did you write?"

After she said that, she heard the sounds of them shuffling their bags from behind her. Then, Nox's voice sounded as he recited emotionally. "My favorite person is Mommy! My mommy is a very awesome doctor! Although she's always busy with work, my brother and I both know that Mommy loves us most! Mommy is busy saving lives and healing the wounded every day, and we think Mommy is the greatest! But we also feel very bad for Mommy. I hope Mommy is not too tired. We'll be very distressed if she's very tired! I hope Mommy will always be the most beautiful!" Rosalie could not help laughing. "It's so long. No wonder your teacher told me that you're so fluent. What about Lucian? What did you write?" Sitting upright, Lucian said seriously, "Mommy is a very awesome doctor. Treating patients is hard, and taking care of me and my brother is also very hard. I want to be as awesome as Mommy in the future! I hope I can grow up quickly and earn money to support my family. That way, Mommy won't need to be tired." Hearing the boys' words, Rosalie could not help but feel her heart go soft. Whatever happened back at the kindergarten just now was thrown to the back of her mind. "Thank you, my babies.

The two little ones met gazes. Sensing that their mommy's mood seemed to have improved, they simultaneously heaved sighs of relief.
