

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 425

Rosalie sat firmly and dared not face the eyes of everyone, she just lowered her gaze and thanked Byron.

Byron did not respond and just meaningfully looked at her before returning to the seat opposite her.

The diving instructor who accompanied Rosalie into the water climbed up the ladder skillfully and returned the camera to Rosalie, when he was about to help her take off the diving equipment, he subconsciously glanced in the direction of the president. He was mindful of his distance from Rosalie and careful not to offend Byron.

Fortunately, this time, Byron did not show any expression.

Only then did the instructor dare to continue helping her.

“Mommy, why did you go down for so long?” Nox looked at his mommy with concern.

Rosalie had already taken off her equipment with the help of the instructor, revealing her slightly pale face.

Seeing Mommy’s appearance, the little ones could not help but worry again.

Rosalie smiled soothingly at them. “The underwater view below was so beautiful that I couldn’t help looking at it for a long time. Sorry for worrying you.”

The little children looked suspicious. “But Mommy, you look really bad now.”

They even wondered whether Rosalie had encountered any trouble underwater but was just afraid that they would be worried, so she was keeping it a secret.

Rosalie knew the kids were still suspicious and looked helplessly at the diving instructor beside her, hoping that he could explain and reassure them.

The instructor understood her gaze, but when he spoke, he looked in the direction of the president.

“Mrs. Lawrence is very talented in diving. There was no accident under the water just now. It’s just that Madam wanted to stay for a while longer. I agreed only after I assessed her situation. She looks pale now only because of physical exhaustion.”

Due to Byron’s attitude just now, the instructor mistakenly thought that Rosalie was his rumored fiancée, so he directly called her ‘Madam’.

The little children first breathed a sigh of relief when they heard the instructor’s words and then noticed how the instructor had addressed Rosalie. They invariably looked at the two adults.

Rosalie’s face became increasingly unwell as she frowned, struggling to explain.

On the other end, Byron interjected. "I know. As long as everything's fine, you did well."

The instructor smiled attentively, completely unaware of what he had done wrong.

Hearing Byron's words, Rosalie frowned and turned to look at the man opposite.

If Byron said this before last night, she might not have said anything.

However, after what happened last night, Rosalie could not help but find it ironic that Byron just simply acquiesced to the title.

Byron nonchalantly met her gaze and said in a deep voice, "Since we're taking the kids out for a fun day, don't be too serious about trivial matters. I think you wouldn't want the children to feel unpleasant either."

Rosalie was stunned again.

'In his eyes, is the title of Mrs. Lawrence just a trivial matter?'

However, she also had to admit that Byron's concerns were right.

If they called out the instructor, he would feel awkward and the subsequent activities would be affected.

If she explained the facts now, it would only make the instructor even more uncomfortable.

After weighing the consequences, Rosalie retracted her gaze and pretended she had not heard what he just said.

Seeing that the woman had compromised, Byron raised his brows slightly, and the corners of his lips turned into a satisfied smug.

The little ones had been paying attention to the two adults, and when they saw Byron's expression, they became all suspicious.

'Why did they feel that Daddy's explanation just now was just used to fool Mommy?'

'Daddy is so powerful. Would these staff members even dare to make this trip unpleasant?'