

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 466

Byron's expression froze slightly at this question.

'How does she feel about him?'

This question never occurred to him.

According to what the woman had always said, she only regards him as a stranger who has nothing to do with each other.

But, in Byron's eyes, Rosalie's attitude was never just that.

In other words, due to his pursuits that the little woman kept contact with him against her will.

Byron could not help but feel a burst of irony.

He thought that she would be somewhat moved by his gestures.

However, according to Rosalie's reaction during this time, he was afraid that what he did before only made things harder for her.

Perhaps, she might even have hoped that he would leave her alone!

Andrius looked at Byron as the latter's face became gloomier, and his heart sank for his friend.

After a while, Andrius carefully expressed his conjecture. "Dr. Jacobs may have really given up on you."

He thought about it in many ways, but he did not think there was a problem with his method.

The only problem was Rosalie's feelings.

The atmosphere in the office became increasingly tense. However, Andrius bit the bullet and continued his analysis.

"Speaking of which, what happened six years ago, if it were me, I wouldn't be able to forgive easily. Dr. Jacobs stayed abroad for six years without coming back. Why did she suddenly come back now? The only reason I can think of is, she has completely let go of everything that had happened six years ago."

Byron heard Andrius' analysis and thought of what the woman kept saying when she had just returned to Somerland that they were just strangers.

The storm brewing around Byron was frightening and there was no expression on his face.

After Andrius finished, he looked up and saw his brother's expression. He immediately felt flustered, and quickly changed his words.

"However, this is also a good thing. If Dr. Jacobs had really let go, then it may be easier for you to pursue her again."

Byron glanced at him coldly.

Andrius met his gaze and smiled sheepishly as he realized that he blundered his words again.

'Easier pursuits, my foot.'

'This was already hell-level difficulty for my buddy!'

'Taking into account that if it wasn't for my suggested method that things had developed into the way they are now, I would just wash my hand off this and leave.'

'But I had given Byron so many ideas, I can't just watch my buddy fail like this.'

Thinking of this, Andrius cleared his throat and took the initiative to take the blame. "Maybe the problem lies with me because the method I taught you was wrong."

On the other end, Byron raised his eyebrows and looked at him.

Andrius was overjoyed that he finally had a reaction and continued to speak earnestly.

"Every woman's mind is different. Dr. Jacobs may not like what other women like. If you want to pursue someone, the most important thing is to understand what she likes."

Unchanging, Byron looked at him and motioned for him to continue talking.

Andrius bit the bullet. "If you want to win Dr. Jacobs' heart, then we'll have to study carefully what exactly she wants."

With that said, he heard his brother snort sarcastically.

Andrius' voice stopped abruptly.

"Forget it." Byron said indifferently. He had already spent so much time on that woman.

She likes nothing more than medicine.

Byron thought that he had already provided as much help as possible.

This time, he even facilitated the cooperation between the woman and the Lancer corporation.

When the research institute lacked medicinal materials this time, he had already helped to send them.

'In the end, I didn't even get a word of thanks.'

'The only possibility is, as Andrius said, that woman has truly given up.'