

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 597

Since Dr. Jacobs returned to the country, the two of them had been interacting with one another for much longer than he knew of.

As far as Andrius knew, Byron had practically been helping Rosalie the entire time. Even the opportunity to cooperate with the Lancer family was given to Rosalie by Byron.

No matter how deep the misunderstanding went between the two of them six years ago, even if Rosalie did not plan to reciprocate Byron's feelings after all that he had done, she should at least be grateful to Byron.

What was more, Byron had created so many opportunities for them to spend time together.

As far as he knew, Rosalie was not a hard-hearted person. How could she remain unmoved?

Byron frowned, and his expression was hideous.

Andrius' question... Was it not the question he wanted to ask the woman as well?

When he thought about the woman ditching Estie back then, he also wondered if the woman's heart was made of stone.

Now, the misunderstanding had been resolved, but the woman's attitude toward him was still this distant.

As to whether Rosalie's heart was made of stone, this speculation once again flooded into Byron's mind.

"So, if Dr. Jacobs really didn't budge, how did you spend your vacation? Did you just pass the time on your own?" Andrius could not help but ask.

Byron shook his head. "I don't know what she was thinking. I even thought she had come to see me as a friend when the vacation was almost over."

Andrius nodded clearly. "That is to say your relationship is sometimes good, sometimes bad? So there's still a time when you two are at ease?"

Hearing this, Byron nodded noncommittally.

Andrius could not stop his head from aching. He was feeling more puzzled by the way these two people were getting along.

He thought Rosalie had always held the same attitude toward Byron and did not expect that there was a time when both of them would be at ease with one another.

How did their relationship change from being at ease with one another to estrangement?

Andrius glanced at Byron in bewilderment. In the end, he gave up trying to understand this matter.

Even the person involved was not clear about it, what else could he do?

It was just that...

“Byron, with the way you’re treating Dr. Jacobs... Just what kind of relationship do you want to have with her?” Andrius naturally could not bear to see his friend like this all the time, and after thinking about it, he still wanted to help him come up with some ideas.

Andrius bit the bullet and asked, “Do you want to reconcile with her? Or do you want to remarry her?”

After all, Rosalie was Estie’s biological mother at the end of the day. Estie also liked her so much.

Even through Andrius’ eyes, Rosalie was the only marriage partner for Byron.

Byron turned and glanced at him, neither admitting nor denying it.

It was tacit approval of his statement.

Seeing this, Andrius was stunned and began to persuade him bitterly, “If this is the case, I think you can discuss your thoughts with Dr. Jacobs directly. After all, based on what you said, there are still times when Dr. Jacobs’ attitude toward you is alright. Or maybe she’s like you, trying to guess what your intentions are?”

Andrius said while looking at Byron’s face, “with how your relationship is now, always going up and down, not only will you not get what you want in the long run but you two will likely become enemies. You don’t want this, do you?”

Byron’s brows furrowed slightly. There was a bit of exhaustion on his face. “Then what do you think I should say to her so that she’ll understand?”

