

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 623

As she struggled with the dilemma on the spot for a while, Rosalie carried the flowers back to the office.

It was not because she had decided to accept Byron but because the flowers were still so fresh, so it would be a waste to throw them away.

This was also the reason why she chose to return the flowers to Byron before.

She was unsure how Byron handled the returned flowers. She wondered whether they were really thrown into the trash as he said.

Just when her mind was idling with these random thoughts, there was a knock on her office door.

Rosalie came back to her senses and replied softly.

After a while, someone pushed the door and entered.

Seeing the person at the door, Rosalie's eyes flashed with surprise. "Young Master Xander, why are you here?"

Xander's lips upturned slightly, revealing a smile. "I happened to be doing errands nearby, and I heard that you came by the research institute. So, I'm just popping by to check on how your injury is doing."

Rosalie pursed her lips and smiled. "Thank you for your concern, Young Master Xander. The wound is almost healed."

Xander nodded, walked into and around the office while taking a look at the place.

Noticing his actions, Rosalie's heart tightened suddenly. She subconsciously glanced at the bouquet she put on the sofa.

She originally wanted to get a vase and put the flowers in, but she forgot about it after she was distracted for a while.

She did not expect that Xander would suddenly visit.

Although Xander would not know who sent the flowers, Rosalie still felt guilty.

"This is...?" Xander's eyes gradually approached the bouquet of flowers and finally stopped on the sofa. He looked at the bouquet of roses in surprise, and then at Rosalie.

Rosalie's heartstrings tightened all of a sudden, but she forced her face to remain calm. "I received them this morning. I don't know who sent the flowers. Maybe it's the wrong delivery."

Hearing this, Xander raised his brows slightly and looked at her up and down.

It was not because he did not believe Rosalie but because Rosalie's excuses were too sloppy.

Rosalie sheepishly looked at him with a faint smile on her face.

Seeing her appearance, Xander smiled knowingly and did not ask any further. He only said, "The bouquet looks like it was picked today. That's rather sweet."

The smile on Rosalie's face became more and more forced as she wanted to change the topic. "Young Master Xander, you didn't come here today just to check in on me about my injury, right? How else can I help you?"

Xander took a seat opposite her and nodded coolly. "You guessed right."

Even when the man was just sitting, Xander's back was straight and looked powerful. After all, he was the heir to a huge legendary family

Seeing that he was following along with her intended subject change, Rosalie breathed a sigh of relief and looked at the person opposite seriously, she motioned him to continue.

"In addition to your research institute, the Lancer family also selected several well-known doctors to participate in this cooperation. I wonder if you'd be interested in meeting them?"

Rosalie was excited to be able to get in touch with more medical experts and agreed without hesitation. "Of course, I'd be honored to."

Xander smiled unsurprisingly. "That's great. Once the time and place are set, I'll notify you as soon as possible."

Rosalie nodded.

The two chatted for a while about the cooperation, then Xander got up and said goodbye.

He came here today mainly to invite Rosalie verbally. After the successful invitation, there was nothing else to do.

When he left, Xander could not help but glance at the roses on the sofa, wondering in his heart who was the person who sent the flowers.

Rosalie's reaction just now made him all the more curious.
