

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 670

Rosalie turned around and saw the man pick up the jug of water again. He filled two glasses of water, then put them in front of Lucian and Nox.

She was confused by the man's actions, wondering if this was the boys' request or if Byron did this to ease the embarrassment just now.

Just when her mind was in chaos, a glass of water was suddenly pushed in front of her.

Rosalie suddenly came back to her senses and raised her eyes to look at the person beside her.

Byron just smiled at her inexplicably, adjusted the glass for her, then withdrew his hand and turned to look at the stage.

Rosalie looked at the glass in front of her with complicated eyes. After a while, she came back to her senses and thanked the man softly. She felt a little apologetic in her heart for possibly misunderstanding him just now.

In order to show that she had no grudge against him, Rosalie took a sip from the glass.

The kids in the back saw their interaction and felt that Rosalie seemed to have let down her guard. They smiled again.

After the concert, Rosalie and Byron got up with the kids and left.

Outside the auditorium, the sky had turned completely dark. Many colorful lights were lit around. The square was bustling with people, and it was very lively.

"Mommy!" Nox tugged at his mommy's hand.

Rosalie lowered her head and looked in the direction he was pointing, only to see the musical fountain in the square not far away. At this moment, jets of water were accompanied by music. Many children led by adults gathered as they had fun in puddles of water.

She rarely took the boys out at night, so it was the first time they saw this kind of fountain. They were eager to go have a look.

Rosalie wanted to go home immediately and did not want to have too much contact with Byron, but when she saw what the little ones were looking forward to, her heart softened.

"Let's go and play!" Nox stared at her eagerly before heading in the direction of the fountain.

Seeing this, Rosalie hesitated for a few seconds but finally agreed. She turned around and said to Byron, "I'll take the boys to play for a while. President Lawrence, you can go home with Estie first.

We'll take a taxi home later."

She originally thought that the little girl would not like this kind of setting as there were many people, so she would obediently go back with Byron.

Unexpectedly, as soon as she finished speaking, she saw the little girl tugging on Byron's sleeve. "Daddy, I want to play too!"

When the little girl willingly asked to play in a crowded place, that took Rosalie by surprise.

Byron touched the little girl's head and agreed immediately. He turned to look at Rosalie and said calmly, "Estie rarely offers to go anywhere to play. I'm afraid I can't indulge your wishes, Miss Jacobs."

After saying that, he took the little girl directly toward the fountain.

Rosalie stared blankly at the backs of the two of them. Little Estie rarely looked so happy. She was wearing a princess dress and skipping and jumping as she held her daddy's hand.

Halfway through, the little girl raised her head and said something to Byron.

Rosalie only saw Byron nod to the little one, then the little one suddenly let go of the man's hand and ran toward her.

"Auntie, let's go together!"

Before Rosalie could react, the little girl grabbed her hand and dragged her toward the fountain.

Lucian and Nox also urged her from behind. "Mommy, let's go over there!"

The boys spoke as they ran out from behind her all the way to the fountain. They started playing on their own.

