

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 710

Rosalie clearly heard the voices of the little kids and could not help feeling strange in her heart, but it was quickly covered up by a guilty conscience.

Just half an hour ago, she just had an unpleasant moment with the man.

This was just a child's game, but she could not stand still and fell into the man's arms.

To anyone else, her actions may have been deliberate.

Only Rosalie knew that she was really careless.

However, if she explained it now, it would only become more complicated...

Rosalie leaned a little stiffly in the man's arms, and her heart was conflicted.

On the other hand, Estie was still immersed in the game and told them, "Don't move!"

The other two little ones responded immediately.

On the other side, Estie could not wait for the two adults to answer. She stared at them with her small face.

"Understood," Byron spoke, his voice close to her ears.

Rosalie's eyes flashed with surprise.

If they really followed Estie's instruction to not move, then she would continue to be held by the man...

The eyes of the little ones were still on them...

Thinking of this, Rosalie resisted for a while. She wanted to break free from the man's arms, but the hand holding her tightened.

"Estie is still waiting for your answer," Byron reminded her in her ear.

Hearing this, Rosalie's movements froze again.

The little girl's eyes fell on her substantively.

Although it was hard to see the little girl's face from her angle, she could imagine the little girl's pitiful puppy eyes.

Rosalie was still soft-hearted in the end and agreed in a low voice, "Okay."

Hearing the two adults agree, the faces of the little children were full of joy.

Byron held Rosalie in his arms, looked down at the expressions of the little kids, and saw the cheeky smirk that flashed across their faces.

Realizing their real intentions of playing the game, Byron was deeply moved. He even found it a little hilarious, but he still held the person in his arms and stood motionless.

However, Byron could not help but snort when he saw that the woman in his arms was so cooperative.

Rosalie clearly heard the man's chuckles. Her body suddenly tensed, and she raised her eyes to look at him.

The smile on Byron's face had not completely left his face, and when he met her gaze, there was a little tenderness in his eyes.

Rosalie felt angry at first, but seeing the man's expression, she was caught in his smile for a moment.

It was the first time she had seen Byron look like this...

They did not know how long they looked at each other before Rosalie suddenly came back to her senses, she realized with hindsight that after so long, Estie seemed to not have looked back.

Rosalie frowned slightly as she realized this and said softly, "I'm a little tired. I won't play anymore."

After saying that, she broke free from Byron's deep arms without hesitation and turned to go upstairs.

Looking at Rosalie's back as she left, the little ones glanced at each other with guilt, knowing that they were too deliberate and Mommy had noticed.

Byron also frowned slightly, his eyes full of helplessness.

It seemed that the woman still refused to forgive him.

Estie was the first to come back to her senses. She raised her finger and pointed at her daddy while announcing, "Daddy, you're eliminated!"

Byron nodded and retreated behind the two little guys.
