

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 712

When Byron heard her from the foot of the stairs, his frown was indiscernible. He turned around to look at the woman by the bedroom door in confusion.

Rosalie's brows and eyes drooped. Her beautiful eyebrows were slightly furrowed as if she was regretting what she said.

Seeing this, he pulled his lower lip in deep thought. "Miss Jacobs, don't force yourself. I won't change my mind because of dinner."

After speaking, the man nodded slightly to Rosalie. He turned around and headed downstairs again to leave.

Hearing the movement, Rosalie raised her eyes and looked over. She sighed silently in her heart, then repeated herself. "Let's have dinner together. If you leave, Estie will definitely be sad."

These words were for Byron, and she also said them to herself.

Just now, Byron mentioned herself six years ago. When Rosalie saw his back view as he left, she could not help but remember how she felt when she left.

Although the pain at that time was caused by this man, Rosalie was soft-hearted and did not want others to be as sad as she was at that time.

Byron's eyes darkened when he heard her trying to make him stay, and his heart ached.

He could guess the reason why this woman wanted to keep him, and he hated himself more for what he did six years ago.

"I'll consider your thoughts carefully. However, I hope you'll give me more time." Rosalie repeatedly compromised.

Byron turned around, the expression on his face already indifferent. "Thank you. "

Rosalie smiled at him in a complicated mood.

The two came downstairs one after the other.

The little ones downstairs were absent-mindedly building some Legos. When they heard movement upstairs, they got up and ran to the foot of the stairs. They looked at the adults eagerly, wanting to know what the two adults were talking about.

After a long while, the little boys could not help but be upfront. " Mommy, are you angry?"

Rosalie was stunned for a few seconds. Thinking of their actions just now, she asked in return, "Did you guys do that intentionally?"

Hearing this question, the expressions on the kids' faces stiffened for a moment.

Fortunately, each of them was an acting wizard, and they quickly recovered their innocence. They looked blankly at Rosalie on the stairs. "Did we do something wrong?"

"I mean I accidentally took up your space just now, right? It's so sorry, Mommy. I just wanted to win." Lucian took the initiative to admit his mistake.

Rosalie stared at the little kids suspiciously for a few seconds, then frowned helplessly.

These little ones were smart and clever. Even if they had really planned something, they would not let her see through it.

Right now, the expressions of the little ones were even more innocent.

She had no proof to doubt them at all.

Seeing this, Rosalie had no choice but to put away her suspicions. She touched the heads of the little ones and said softly, "I'm not angry, just a little tired."

The kids looked suspiciously at Byron.

Byron nodded to the little ones casually.

Seeing that Daddy nodded, the little guys were relieved, knowing that the two adults must have been reconciled.

Thinking of this, there was a smile on their faces.

The two adults played with the kids for a while. This time, the kids did not dare to pull any tricks and just had fun.

Soon, it was evening, Rosalie was able to get hold of the three little ones who had gone crazy from fun and got them to help her prepare dinner together.

The little ones happily obliged.

