

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 810

After long contemplation, Andrius bit the bullet and gave a suggestion. "It must be that you haven't done enough."

Hearing this, Byron raised his brows slightly, his voice implicitly questioning Andrius. "Well, I did everything you said."

Andrius was dumbfounded and felt like asking him which one of them was actually pursuing Rosalie.

Then, he considered Byron's personality and concluded his buddy was not really lady-chasing material. Andrius could only save his breath and just take the fall for his buddy's failure in pursuits.

"That's because the methods I told you before aren't enough..." Andrius said resignedly.

Hearing this, Byron looked at him puzzled. "What else can I do?"

The woman's attitude this morning made him uneasy, and Byron wanted to change her attitude as quickly as possible.

Andrius touched his nose and said with a guilty conscience. "Women like romance. If you can find a way to give her a romantic experience, she'll definitely be moved."

'Romance?'

Byron frowned, then recalled all the moments he was with the woman.

'When it comes to romance, I don't think I've done anything romantic yet.'

'Or maybe I did but I didn't know it.'

"For example, you can take her shopping or buy her a small gift while she's not paying attention? Or prepare a candlelight dinner for her?"

Andrius knew that his buddy would not know what the so-called romance was and explained it to him patiently.

Byron listened to his various proposals, and his face was horrified. "I can't do it."

'With my character, I'd usually never do these things.'

'The woman will see through me.'

'If I really do any of these things, she might suspect my actions are insincere?'

Andrius was a little anxious. "Well, that's how you do something romantic. Even if you can't do those things, you can always do something similar. If you don't do anything at all, Dr. Jacobs will not forgive you even until the end of the world. You'd better think about it for yourself!"

The solutions he tried so hard to come up with were all rejected by his best friend. If Byron continued to press further, Andrius would be truly out of options!

Hearing this, Byron raised his hand and pressed the center of his eyebrows.

'Indeed, I'm the one who wants to make it up to that woman. It's up to me to figure out a way.

'But, what on earth is romance? I have no idea at all now?

Andrius suppressed the frustration in his heart and persuaded him earnestly. "The time has come to do this, so let go of those unnecessary pretenses. I've seen Dr. Jacobs' attitude toward you before, and that's the worst of it. If you don't do anything, you two will probably be like this all the time."

After speaking, Andrius got up and patted his best friend's shoulder. "These gestures aren't more difficult than doing business, and you won't lose a finger if you do it. If you really want Dr. Jacobs to forgive you, you should give them a try."

Byron felt strange.

After a long while, he nodded and agreed. "I understand, I'll do those things."

Seeing that Byron finally gave in, Andrius breathed a sigh of relief. He then carefully added a cover line. "Even if Dr. Jacobs really agrees to be a technical consultant for them, she'll just be doing her job, so don't take it to heart."

Byron frowned. Thinking of the conversation between the two, he finally nodded.

Andrius had a smile on his face again and turned to talk about Heronial Corporation

