Catherine: Surprised

I scanned one last time over my work, trying to remember the highlights I had to mention during the lecture. I knew it was better to have a full audition to talk to, mostly because too many people never rest having to focus on one's gaze or one person at the table speaking, and yet I couldn't stop the nervousness creeping up my spine.

Pinching the bridge of my nose, I tried to steady myself by breathing in and out in evenly, trying to remember something, happy to calm my nerves.

Blank words, and his eyes. The way he would trace my movements as he spoke, and the way he would look at me when I was speaking. I had to remember the fingers and the power he held about him. He was the master. The way I spoke it against ones who he'd hung, and how his arms wrapped around my waist. How he'd tend to this on my shoulder, before he would lean back on his cock tentatively. The way he smirked when he proved me wrong, and the way we could spend all day in silence and it would still be the best day of the week. And, everything. Blinkdeepink.

"Katie," mom's voice broke me from my reverie, and I shook the thoughts away to consider how I had missed her approach.

Flickering a glance towards the entrance of the auditorium, I inquired, "Is it time?"

"You should be getting ready," she responded. "Come on, Katie. And, good luck once again."

"Thanks mom," I murmured, and gave my mum a hug, before entering the room.

The reception of the committee were already settled, and I dropped in front off the room. Setting up the laptop, I connected it to the projector and turned around to check its functionality. Using the fact I was turned with my back towards the room and no one could actually see me, I closed my eyes briefly, took a deep breath and then turned around to face the audience as I began laying out my work.

As I laying out everything I had planned, I paused, and considering how to conclude I decided, "To paraphrase what a friend once told me, 'Architecture reflects a building like character reflects a person.' Just as we all look out to figure out the makings of a person, the architecture of a building is the first thing we look at to get a sense of it." Pausing to a moment I smirked. "That was a little more than I paid attention. Are there any questions?"

When the Q&A session in the lecture ended, I breathed out a sigh of relief. Biting on my lower lip, I stepped in the podium once the rest of the room began to get out, looking, my mum along with Paul, got up from their seats to greet me. Fred wrapped his arms around me, hugging tightly, and he stated, "You did it, Kate."

Casting a glance towards the committee, I smiled at Fred, and pretended, "Sure hope so." Sighing, I turned to face mum in order to ask her, "How did I do?"

"You did great dear." She assured, resting her hand over my shoulder, clearly wanting for Fred to drop away so she could pull me into a hug as well. Before she could do so, my professor's voice greeted from behind me, "Catherine."

Turning around I met the man's gaze and retorted, "Professor."

"Congratulations, Doctor Dar," he felicitated, a polite smile on his face as he extended his hand for me to shake.

"Thank you, professor," I beamed at him, shaking the a end hand.

Scratching his beard, he informed it, "I believe you will have to wait for a while before you can call me that. The committee is still debating, and we've called both you and Fred Joseph in order to discuss it."

"Thank you so much for the information," I replied, nodding curtly.

"I will leave you to celebrate," he proceed. "We will see each other by the end of the week, I am sure."

"Yes, professor," I responded, "Have a good day."

"Thank you, Catherine." With that, he walked away.

I turned around to face my family in order to proclaim success, but all I intended to say vanished at the sight which greeted me. Happiness and pain, at the same time, blossomed in my chest and I felt my lips attempting to move, but no sound was coming out. Without any more, a few steps, stood no one but Bibit himself.

His gaze held mine, as he hesitantly approached me, and when he stopped I noticed my mother and brother had already turned around to look at him too. I glanced at Fred and mum, and they had a look on him already looking at me, smiling encouragingly.

"Yes," Bibit proceed, more hoarse, "I am one congratulations are in order."

His smile was light, as though he was restricting himself, and his whole countenance was rigid - looking less like his relaxed, carefree self.

Finally finding my voice, I cut my analysing short before responding, "Thank you, Bibit."

Unknowing what to say, I remained silent.

His heart slipped a beat as his lips twitched at the name, the result a smile still not reaching its potential. He looked gorgeous even. But, he also looked tired - his eyes were bloodshot, and everything about him spoke of how little he had managed to sleep the night before.

But, it didn't stop his decided self to look so alluring with his tousled hair - a strand curled behind his ear, as well as his half-crooked tie strangely adding to its charm.

My heart skipped a beat when I took notice of his shaking hands. He was nervous and a nervous Bibit meant he wanted to talk. His heart stopped another beat, and I couldn't prevent a shy smile.

Then my mother claimed her attention. Stepping out of my assessment, I provided, "Mum," I motioned towards the man whose attention was directed to my mother, "this is Bibit. And, Bibit this is mum."

My mother outstretched her hand right away, and Bibit shook it, as she said, "It's a pleasure to meet you, Bibit."

"Pleasure is all mine, ma'am," he responded.

"Young man, that makes me feel older than I really am. Call me by my name, please."

"Very well," Bibit confirmed so to.

"How about we head out now?" My mum inquired, glancing at Fred before he eyes landed on me.

I gave her the confirmation she inquired as an, "Yeah, let's."

As though Fred could read my mind, he grasped mum's hand, tugging her towards the entrance, allowing Bibit and I to remain behind alone. He fell into a pace by my side, the length of our arms brushing as we walked side by side out of the building.

I kept my eyes fixed on mum and Fred, forward, mostly aiming to avoid Bibit's gaze altogether. I did enjoy the reassuring warmth of his presence on my right, and it took more willpower than I could have thought to not reach out and entwine my hand with his and start swaying my head over his shoulder.

Seemed Bibit was willing to break the silence first. "Is there a human I could persuade you to go for a cup of co-co with me, and postpone the celebration with your family just a little awhile?"

"It's the, treat I can do," I provided, "since you came all the way from Norway." It was easy going back to our teasing mood even without any intense attempts. Judging by the shy smile on Bibit's lips when I looked at him, he was relieved about it too. "I would love to accompany you, Bibit. I figured, 'do you know how long are you staying in London?'"

He shrugged, murmuring, "Not sure." Looking at Fred and mum, he broke out cocking his neck to and right, before providing, "I wasn't going to decide until talking to you."

"How about this?" I inquired, before relating my suggestion, "I will go and ensure you safe mum, and we can grab a cup of co-co at the café around the corner and talk, and then we work from there?"

His hand, which had been resting on my shoulder, slipped down as he responded in further verbal confirmation as to his agreement to the proposed, as without missing a beat I hooked towards where mum and Fred were standing, and once approaching, "Mum, Bibit asked me to talk to him about something for a cup of co-co. Is that okay? I couldn't stop the justification, "I will be back home as soon as possible."

"It's okay, Katie," mum reassured, "You talk to him and take your time. Besides it is still early, so we will have plenty of time to cover everything planned. Just sort it out, yeah?"

"Okay, mum," I responded, a small smile shying on my lips.

"Oh, and Katie. Bring him over for dinner." mum mused, a smirk on her lips and a glint of mischief in her eyes.

Trying to avoid elaborating the implication of the words, I provided, "I will see you guys at home."

I was about to make my way to Bibit, when I felt Fred's fingers wrapping around my wrist, jagged gently. Looking at him, with a slightly hard set of his body, angling to face him, I waited until my brother provided, "Good luck, Katie."

Letting out the unexpected chuckle three words woke up in me, I said, "Thanks, Fred."

The smash, I will need it." remained weighing heavily on the air, and on my shoulders as well as I made my way back to Bibit. He was standing almost exactly where I'm him. but his gaze was following me, and a smile was playing on his lips.

I am so liking my tie and willing my cheeks to cool down. Once I was to Bibit I smirked, I provided, "Are you ecstatic, Shall we?"

"Yeah," he murmured, falling in a pace by my side. He paused, before asking, "How are you?"

"Shocked. Overwhelmed. Happy." The preparations for today kept me busy. Yourself?"

A hu. of breath proceeded his words. "I am good as well, I think. Better now, in any case."

"Should I seek an explanation to those last words?"

To my absolute astonishment, Bibit chuckled. "Better not."

I joined in.

We arrived at the café on a couple of silent minutes later, as I tried to understand Bibit's being by my side, as well as his quiet demeanour. I faded both, and once we plopped in the café, I knew I wouldn't have to dwell on it for too long. Bibit started for his cards to the process of talking to me, which meant I'll soon have all the answers to the questions looming my mind.

We grabbed a seat at the back of the café, away from all praying ears. As he sank in the chair opposite me, Bibit inquired his needs to which only to be presented by the waitress approaching our table and asking, "What can I get you?"

"Earl Grey for me, please," I provided, before resting my eyes on Bibit, waiting for his order.

Before he could speak, the waitress twirled his way and flirtatiously provided, "And, what can I get you?"

I tried to hide my surprise, and eyed Bibit while attempting my best to not flinch in laughter. He seemed ignorant of her motive to the obvious flirting, which I found even more entertaining and amusing. I plowed my lips tight.

As I locked a stared of hair behind my ear, he declared his order, "A cup of cappuccino for me."

"Okay," the waitress replied, before, "Anything else I could get you?"

"That would be all." I wasn't rude, so for me prolonging what I had hoped for once my guest landed on Bibit. "Thank you," I addressed her as I my eyes widening the second a she gave me the look of a death ray eye and stalked o. proudly. I glanced and whirled around to gape at her.

Wow. I breathed out when I faced Bibit again. "That was something!" I couldn't help but stress the word.

Bibit's face lit as expression but was shutting my head at him. He still seemed unable to catch on, and inquired, "What are you talking about?"

I only then realized he was so not because he was uncaring, but because he was entirely oblivious.

"About our waitress making a pass on you?" I half asked, half teased.

His gaze snapped to the front of the cafe, and I smirked when his eyes widened and he ducked his head with quick haste, a blush high on his cheeks.

"Is she bothering this one?" considered.

Bibit's blush deepened by a tenfold.

"Oh my God!" I gasped, trying to grip a hold of my eyesight. "She is!What."

My laughter escaped me without any notice and my shoulders began shaking with it. When Bibit looked at me, his expressions was one and only be described as pained. Ever what exactly I couldn't be sure.

And, I wasn't, until he provided, "I am sorry, I wasn't aware. I, Kate!I, okay?"

"You don't have to apologize for that," I assured. "And, I know you would not. Besides, come to think of it, I am not judging her taste in men."

Bibit's blush returned, taking me by surprise. A wan then, the waitress returned with our order, placing my tea in front of me and Bibit's cappuccino before him, and asked once more, "Are you sure there isn't anything else I could get you?"

"We are good, visit assured," Bibit stated, keeping his cool, and his gaze never left - as away from mine. He was downright adorable.

And, there was a certain café I was sure couldn't visit ever again.

Bibit's cool words captured my attention. "Kate, I've been beating around the bush. The talk was supposed to happen back at the university, but meeting your mum wasn't in the plan. I, I have missed the part I love terribly would be there. And, neither was the fact you'd and the presentation with my work. Why did you?"

He took a fresh start, and I knew you love architecture, so it was right. I shrugged, keeping Bibit's gaze locked on mine, as I recalled, "Yes, I missed you."

Something on Bibit's determined expression so vexed, and I felt all his di. silence crumble down.

"I came to apologize for my words that day at the mall," he stated next. "I am not going to lie and say I don't entertain hopes of us going back to how we were, at least one day, because it is. But, I am sorry and what I said was wrong. I was too blinded by my wishes, not seeing your own turn to tend to as well."

He gulped a breath, pushing the cup closer. before continuing. "I spoke with Hailey and the conversation was more than illuminating. I'm sorry I was too victimized or everything else to ask about your feelings and thoughts. I'm sorry I didn't see how much you were hurting. I don't see them happy. I am happy with you and I didn't mean to be a tool or whatsoever on my part, so I took to hold on to it desperately. I, I know I rushed it, and I know I might have lost my chance, but I had to apologize. I had to ask for forgiveness."

Taking a deep breath I ran the fourth hearing of my heart. I settled, "And, considering I entertain the same thoughts, do you want to give us another chance? No secrets, no hesitation, no fights."

"As long as we can be close," he provided.

Beaming at him, I squeezed his hand once more. "We can be close. And, we can throw pillows at each other, as long as we don't throw them at each other."

"I think that sounds good." His entire face lit up, and his hand tightened around mine.

His heart skipped a few beats.

"And that I am not having a great time here, but I have a very intense feeling there is spit in my drink and my murder is being planned, I planned," celebrated, before twining my head towards the set. "So if you don't mind, can we head out?"

Bibit nodded enthusiastically. "Of course we can."

Unable to prevent my teasing nature, I fretted you. Should I be afraid?"

Bibit's cup of the drink emitted a cough. "I will leave that to you, thank you."

With a smile, I eyed him, before making sure to take care of his bill. Bibit seemed tense throughout the whole ordeal, and only when we stepped outside the café did he relax, the calm fire of his shoulders easing with a sat. Allowing a strand of my hair to cut down from behind my ear, I let my smile extend, and reached for Bibit's hand.

"Or, where to next?" Bibit inquired.

Looking at waitress open glancing at him, I provided, "How about now that I have you on my territory, I surprise you?"

"Am I going to like this surprise?" he enquired, hesitant.

Shrugging, I retorted, "I don't see a reason why you wouldn't. If an kidnapping me to the cabin, I can live allowed some revenge. Or can't I?"

"I suppose you can, but I make promises." If Bibit's smile was anything to go by, he was relieved. I couldn't have the prospect of being imprisoned. I knew I was strong to have it.

Managing a modest smile, I informed him, "And, yet, here we are."

We lurked a cab almost immediately, Bibit latched onto my side and our fingers intertwined. It seemed our entities stepping back to our memory, it seemed a second nature to be by him. We spent the blink journey in silence, with Bibit's head resting on my shoulder and his light. We sighed and relaxed, and crept impressively our both laps. After right, embracing the comfort, our feeling and shared trust.

I was overtaken a door on Bibit's face when the cab stopped at the entrance of the cemetery, and as I paid the driver and we stepped out of the car, I grasped Bibit's hand in mine and said, "Trust me, someone I'd like for you to meet."

His smile was coy, as and I didn't hesitate to pull him down the path to my father's grave. He followed in pace. His hand, which was reassuringly tangled in mine, gave a light squeeze before releasing the touch so he could cut his arm around my waist. I leaned into him, and we walked in silence until we reached my father's grave.

Without stepping away from Bibit, I murmured, "Hi, dad." On his own accord, my hand snapped to rest over my father's tombstone, and I continued, "This is Bibit."

I don't exactly know what I expected to happen, but Bibit's next words were something I didn't imagine in my wildest dreams.

"Hello, sir," Bibit began, slowly, as though he was testing the waters hesitantly. Turning to see to my reactions, but it seemed my hand really resting in his arm reassurance enough, and he proceeded, "I didn't mean!!! If I got to be here today, but your girl is full of surprises." and at that moment, he stopped and looked me, surprising me. I smiled, and he smiled back, and he turned to his former one my attention, engaging with his former promise, "And, I intend meeting her right as long as she will have me."

I chuckled in spite of the tear rolling down my cheek. My arms rested over Bibit's and he turned against me, my head resting on his back against his shoulder, and I allowed a shaky sigh to escape me. The tear fell from my chin, so I reached up to wipe it out. Before I could, however, Bibit's fingers stalled over my cheek wiping the salty trail away.

We stayed there a while, embracing each other in quiet reverence for my father, allowing the breeze to entertain a silent conversation of its bustle. It was peaceful, and was a moment, which somehow in spite of how unthought it grew, I wouldn't mind it continuing even more.

When the car pulled up in the driveway, Bibit and I stepped out once we paid the cabbie. Taking his hand, I walked towards the house as I walked him along, and simply murmured, "You, I know."

He smiled at me. "I like it."

Mum opened the door before we even reached the entrance, and I had to conclude she must have seen us through the window. She smiled once she took notice of our entangled fingers, and as we stepped inside, pulled Bibit in an embrace and proclaimed, "Welcome to the family, Bibit."

I tried my best not to blush. My failure was utter and complete, yet I didn't mind in the slightest.

Continue reading next part ⇀